The Committee of Eſtates were much more compliant with the King at his return than before, and having ſummoned a general meeting to be held at St. Johnſtons conſiſting of the King, Lords, Barons and Burgeſſes to conſult for the good of the Kirk, King and Kingdome; together with the Commiſſioners of the Kirk then at Sterling to adjourn their ſitting thither; They applied themſelves to compoſe all differences amongſt diſſenters, of which the moſt formidable were, Huntly, Middleton, and thoſe in the North; but after a while, by the prudence of this aſſembly, and the good advice of the moderate Clergie, all was concluded; and the Duke of Hamilton, the Marqueſſe of Huntly, and the Earls of Lythgow, Lauderdale, Calendar, and Craford, Lyndſey, and the Lords Buchein, Dedup, and Middleton of the Scots, with many others were received into favour and promiſe of imployment in the Army; and of the Engliſh, The Earl of Cleveland, the Lord Wentworth, the Lord Wilmot, and ſome few other Royalliſts were continued about the King; for before, none of that Nation but the Duke of Buckingham, Maſſey, Graves and Titus, were permitted neer his Perſon.

A grand Conventi-) on held at St. Johnſtons.

Divers of the Royal Nobility received into the favour of this Aſſembly.

Whilſt theſe matters were agitated betwixt the King and the Committee of Eſtates at St. Johnſtons, Cromwell was not idle, he had begun to fortifie Leith, and laid a cloſe ſiege to Edenburgh Caſtle, and on the fourteenth of September he marched to Lithgowe, and from thence to Falkirk within a mile of Sterling, (neer which place the main of the Kings Army lay) and ſent a ſummons to the Town, but was reſolutely denied by the Governor, and he returned back to Lithgowe, where General Deane came to him from England with recruits of men and ſupplies of all ſorts of proviſions: But ſince he could not effect any thing againſt Sterlin, he reſolved to try what might be done in the Weſt of Scotland, and in Octobor he marched to Glaſcow upon intelligence that Major General Mountgomery was ordered by the King to march into thoſe parts, to ſecure that County which was then wavering in their allegiance. In this expedition he hoped to prevail very much either by ſubduing Ker and Straughan (who lay in thoſe parts) to his power, or gaining them to his party; which was a deſign he had long before projected, and ſo far by his inſinuations proceeded in it, that Mr. John Guthery, Mr. Patrick Gelasby, and Mr. Rutherford Miniſters, with many others of that order withdrew from the Aſſembly at St. Johnſtons, and in print remonſtrated in the name of themſelves and the Weſtern Churches againſt the preſent proceedings, and the admiſſion of Malignants (ſuch they call'd the Kings beſt Subjects) to power and imployment; And with theſe Ker, Straughan, the Laird of Warreſton, Sir John Chieſly, and Sir James Stuart and others confederated.

The diſſatisfied Miniſters remonſtrate againſt the proceedings of the Eſtates at St. Johnſtons.

The Eſtates and Commiſſioners of the Kirk at St. Johnſtons reſented much this Remonſtrance and the defection of the Miniſters, but no means they could then uſe was of force to reconcile them; inſomuch, that the diviſion of publick Reſolutioners and Remonſtrators (for by thoſe names they were diſtinguiſhed) continued in that Kingdome with much animoſity till the year 1660. that the King was reſtored to the full exerciſe of his Authority, though the cauſe thereof (which was the joyning all intereſts to oppoſe the invaſion of a forein Army) had long ceaſed, but by that occaſion Cromwells Conqueſt was made very eaſie, and his fomenting that rent in their Church, made their ſubjection to his authority more laſting than otherwiſe it would have been.

The King was deſirous to compoſe this diſorder, or at leſt to prevent the dividing ſo great a force as was under Ker and Straughan from his ſervice; and to that end, the Earl of Caſſells and the Lord Broody, and Mr. Robert Douglas the Miniſter were ſent to treat with them; but they were ſomewhat averſe to a compoſure, yet they declared againſt any conjunction with Cromwell, profeſſing equally againſt Malignants and Sectaries: nevertheleſs, Ker upon information that Straughan held intelligence with Cromwell, was at length ſo far induced to comply, that he took him 1650. him Priſoner, and ſent him to Dunbarton Caſtle, from whence he was afterwards removed to Cathnes; but after a while by the negligence or connivance of his Keepers he eſcaped to Edenburgh to the Engliſh.

Cromwell, whilſt he was at Glaſcow, had intelligence that the Kings Army intended to relieve Edenburgh Caſtle, which made him return thither, and leave Major General Lambert with a good Brigade to make inpreſſion in the Weſtern parts. He after ſome inquiry diſcovered a ford over Hamilton River, over which on the laſt of November he marched his Souldiers; Ker had intelligence of this, and at a Town of that name, he reſolutely fell into Lamberts quarters, but the Engliſh Horſe had ſo ſoon the alarm, that they drew together, and ſo well received his Charge, that a hundred of the Scots were kill'd, and the reſt routed and purſued as far as Ayr, and Ker himſelf (having his right hand almoſt cut off) was taken priſoner.

Col. Ker defeated, and taken Priſoner by Major General Lambert.

Lambert left Colonel Whally with ſome Troops at Ayr to command in thoſe Weſtern parts, and return'd himſelf to the groſs of the Army.

In England ſome attempts were made for the Kings ſervice, but without ſucceſs, and particularly in Norfolk, many Gentlemen & others were drawn together, but before they could be form'd into Troops, they were ſurpriſed and ſuppreſſed by two Troops from Lyn, and ſome Forces of the Militia of the County joyned with them, and twenty of them being afterward found guilty by an illegal High Court of Juſtice, were ſentenced to death, and executed thereupon.

The riſing in Norfolk for the King, ſuppreſſed.

Edenburgh Caſtle had been beſieged ſome moneths with little loſs on either ſide, and Derbyſhire Miners were brought out of England to undermine it, who carried on the work ſixty foot, but the rock was ſo hard they could work no further.

The Governour was one Dundaſſe, a Son in Law of old Leven, who was ſo practis'd on by Cromwell, that he ſurrendred the Caſtle on the 24*th*. of of December upon the enſuing conditions.

Edenburgh Caſtle ſurrendred to Cromwell.

1. The Caſtle to be ſurrendred to Cromwell with all the Ordnance, Arms, Magazine and Furniture of War.

2. The Governour and all the Officers and Souldiers to march out with Colours diſplayed, Drum beating, Match lighted, and Bullet in mouth, and to be conveyed to what place they ſhould deſire, and every Souldier to have what Baggage he could carry.

3. The Publick moveables, Records, Writs and Evidences, to be removed to Sterlin, or to Fife.

4. Proclamation to be made, that all that had Goods in the Caſtle, to come or ſend to own and receive them.

5. All ſick or wounded Officers and Souldiers to have liberty to ſtay in Edenburgh.

6. Horſes and Waggons or other Carriage to be by the Engliſh provided for the Governor and the Officers for their convenience of Travel. 1650.

7. Hoſtages to be given mutually for the performance of the Conditions.

The King and the Committee of Eſtates were much troubled at the news of this loſs, and the the more, becauſe thereby they perceived, that what the force of their Enemies could not gain from them, their own diviſions, and the perfidious treachery of falſe friends would deprive them of. There were found in the Caſtle five French Cannon, nine Dutch demi-Cannon, two Culverins, two demi-Culverins, two Minions, two Faulcons, eight and twenty braſs Drakes, two Petards, eight thouſand Arms, neer eighty Barrels of Powder, and a proportionable ſtore of Cannon-ſhot, with good ſtore of Oatemeal, Butter, freſh Water, and Beef and Pork.

The Maſter-gunner reported, that when the Guns were drawing to the Batteries, he had ſo planted his Pieces, that thoſe of the Enemie could not have been planted but with great loſs of men in the action; but when he prepared to give fire, he was forbidden ſo to do by the Governor, on pain of death.

Abernethy his confident went often out of the Caſtle, on pretence to get intelligence, but the buſineſs was to make a bargain with Cromwell for the Caſtle, and when it was ſurrendred, he ſtaid at Edenburgh, and was ever after a promoter of the deſigns of the Engliſh for the Conqueſt and enſlaving of his native Countrey.

After the loſs of Edenburgh Caſtle, all the Forts on this ſide of Sterlin were taken by the Engliſh, ſo that thoſe of the Scots that were loyal to the King, applied themſelves with all diligence to raiſe what Forces they could to compleat an Army; and that his authority might have the greater ſtrength and reverence of the people, they immediately proceeded to his Coronation; which was on the firſt of January ſolemniz'd at Scoone a few miles diſtant from St. Johnſtons (the accuſtomed place of Coronation of the Kings of Scotland) the King being the forty eighth Monarch of that Kingdome there crowned.

The King ſolemnly Crown'd at Scoon.

It was celebrated with loud Acclamations, Bonefires, ſhooting off of Guns, and with as much pomp and ceremony as the preſent ſtate of things would permit: The Nobility, Barons and Burgeſſes, went from St. Johnſtons to Scoon in their Robes, bringing thither with them the Crown, Sword, and Scepter; (the whole Scotch Army, which ſtood all the way as a Guard between thoſe two places, making a Lane for them as they went along.) In the Preſence Chamber, (where the Lord of Angus attended as Lord Chamberlain for that day,) was plac'd a Chair of State, where the King ſate with all his Lords and Attendants about him: after a low obeyſance made to him by all the Company, the Marqueſs of Argaile made a Speech;

1650. Wherein he declared the affections of the Parliament, Assembly and People to him, and of their hopes of good from him, to make them happy, in bringing England and all their Enemies in subjection to him and them: Moreover he added, That the Parliament of Scotland were come to present his Majesty with the Crown, Sword and Scepter.

Then he was attended by all his Train marching in order before him to the Kirk of Scoon, where, in the midst of a large Stage of 24 foot square, a plat-form was erected with an ascent of two steps, and on the top thereof a Chair of State was plac'd for the King to sit on; the Canopy of Crimson Velvet, under which the King went, was supported by the Lords Drummond, Carnegie, Ramsey, Johnston, Brechin and Yester; his Train by four other Earls Sons, the Lord Ereskin, Mountgomery, Newbottle, Machlene; the Supporters of the Canopy being likewise supported by six others, the sons of Noblemen: On the Kings right hand went the Lord Great Constable, on his left, the Lord Great Marshal; the Honours were carried before him by the chiefest of the Nobility, in this order; Immediately before him went the Earl of Argyle carrying the Crown, next before him the Scepter was carried by the Earl of Craford Lindsey, the Sword by the Earl of Rothes, the Spurs by the Earl of Eglington: As soon as they were entred into the Kirk, and the King seated in his Throne, he took the usual Oath which his Predecessors the Kings of Scotland were wont to take at their Coronation. One of each of the three Estates of Scotland, namely, the Marquess of Argyle (as being of the Nobles) one Baron, and one Burgess holding the Crown among them; then they delivered it to three Ministers of the Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, who were appointed by the Estates in Parliament to present it unto him. At the presentation of the Crown to the King by the three Ministers, one of them made his Address in this form;

SIR,

I do present unto You, King Charles, the Crown and Dignity of this Realm.

Then turning his face towards the People, he said,

Are you willing to have Him for your King, and to become subject to Him?

Whereupon the King turning himself to them, the people cried out with a loud Voice, God save King Charles the Second. Then after he had been anointed by the three Ministers with the Regal Unction, the Crown was set upon his head by the Marquess of Argyle, the Scepter was also given into his hand by the Earl of Lindsey, and the Sword carried before him by the Earl of Rothes. As soon as the Crown was put upon his head, he made this short Speech to the people.

I do esteem the affections of my good People more than the Crowns of many Kingdoms; and shall be ready, by Gods assistance, to bestow my life for your defence, wishing to live no longer than I may see Religion and this Kingdom to flourish in all Happiness. 1650.

Adding many other expressions of his Love and Affection to the people, and afterwards Mr. Robert Douglass made an hortatory Oration or Sermon to his Majesty.

The Ceremonies of the Coronation ended, and a plentiful entertainment prepared, the King sate at one Table, and the Lords at another, there passing many Caresses and Testimonies of joy all Dinner time between them; after which they all returned to St. Johnstons, in the same order and pomp they came from thence to Scoon.

After the Coronation, the King intended to march Northwards to hasten the Levies there made, by his presence; but the Nobility and Gentry of the Highlands, promising to compleat their numbers with all expedition, He went no further than Aberdeen; in the mean time, that those Scots that opposed his Authority might be less able to seduce others, Straughan, Swinton, Colonel Dundasse (the late Governour of Edenburgh) Major Abernethy, Captain Giffan, and Andrews, were on the 14*th*. of January excommunicated for complying with the English.

The King having visited Aberdeen, Dundee, and several other good Towns, return'd to St. Johnstons to be present at the assembling of the Parliament, which met there on the second of March, and the Duke of Hamilton and many of the Lords that were reconciled to the Kirk, were admitted to their seats therein. The Parliament applied themselves with all imaginable care for the raising of Souldiers, and proscribed and sequestred the Persons and Estates of all that held correspondence with the English, and that the Levies might be better made, they adjourned the Parliament to the 17*th*. of April, and sent Middleton into the North to raise Forces there, and others of Authority in other parts to imploy their interests to draw Souldiers together; and till they should again be convened, a Counsel of State and Committee of War were appointed of select persons out of each of the three Estates.

Great care was taken for the fortifying of the Town of Sterlin, the King himself going often to view the Works, and incourage the expediting thereof. In the mean time on the 15*th*. of April in a miste, the Lord Mountgomery Son to the Earl of Eglington, and the Lord Cranston, with five hundred Horse and Dragoons, march'd from Sterlin, and resolutely fell into Lithgow, whence having taken what Prisoners they could in haste meet with, they retreated; yet before they could get to Sterlin, Major Sydenham the Governour of Lithgow with a good party pursued, overtook and charged them, but were so well received by the Scots, that Sixty of the English were slain, and Sydenham himself so wounded, that he died shortly after. This good fortune of the Scotch did not long continue, for a while after the Earl of Eglington the Father of this Lord Lord Mountgomery with one of his Brothers, were taken at Dunbarton by one Captain Crook of Colonel Berrys 1651.

1651. Cromwel being at Edenburgh, having notice how the Kings Army lay encamped at Sterlin, and that abundance of Proviſions was brought in dayly in order to an intended march into England; and that he might be in readineſs to prevent it, he drew all his Forces together and encamped near Edenburgh.

The Parliament of Scotland were about this time again aſſembled at St. Johnſtons, and very buſie in conſultation about their Militia, and providing for the peace and ſecurity of the Kingdom. Middletons Northern Levies amounted to near eight thouſand, and it was much controverted, whether thoſe Forces ſhould make a diſtinct Army, or joyn with the Southern Army; but at laſt a conjunction of all was agreed; but becauſe there was ſome emulation betwixt Leſly and Middleton about chief Command of the Army, the King reſolved to take it to himſelf to prevent all diſcontents therein.

The 29*th*. of May, being the Kings Birthday, was celebrated in Scotland with great ſolemnity and feaſting, and there was a Muſter of all the Troops and Companies, and at night all the ſtreets blazed with Bon-fires, and the Cannons were ſhot off from Sterlin, Brunt-Iſland, and the reſt of the Scotch Garriſons; but not any place ſhewed their affection to the King in ſo particular a manner as the Town of Dundee, from which a large contribution of money was collected towards his aſſiſtance, and the Citizens preſented to him a rich and ſtately Tent, and ſix pieces of Ordnance, and raiſed a Regiment of Horſe at their own charge.

The Kings Birth-day celebrated by the Scots.

About the beginning of June the Parliament of Scotland ended, having before their diſſolution given large Commiſſions and inſtructions for the preſſing of men in all parts of the Kingdom beyond Fife, and in the Weſtern parts for a new Army, which was to conſiſt of fifteen thouſand Foot, and three thouſand Horſe and Dragoons.

An Act of Oblivion in Scotland.

They concluded in a very calm and admirable temper, having paſſed an Act of Oblivion for all things done thitherto, inviting thereby all parties to joyn in carrying on the ſervice of the King, and a new Ingagement with the Sacrament was taken by all the Nobility and Officers and Souldiers of the Army to adhere to him; whereby all faction and diviſion ſeemed in a great meaſure to be obliterated, and Warreſton and thoſe with him, that were treacherous or diſſenters not before ſummon'd, were on the penalty of Excommunication to appear at the Aſſembly at Sterlin by a limited time.

Cromwel was very vigilant all this while, and waited greedily for any opportunity to draw the Scotch Army to Engagement, and for that purpoſe he marched to Newbridge, and from thence to Lithgow, where from the Battlements of the Caſtle he diſcerned the Tents of the Scotch Army encamped in Torwood about four miles on this ſide Sterlin, having caſt up a regular and well fortified Line with Bulworks and Guns mounted for their defence, and having a River behind them, over which they might at pleaſure paſs.

The King did not think the force he ſhould raiſe in Scotland able to fight Cromwel and invade England, without ſome preparations there for his aſſiſtance, to divide the Engliſh Forces at home, to which end he kept intelligence with ſeveral of his friends in London, Lancaſhire and other parts. And it was contrived that the Duke of Buckingham, the Lord Wilmot, and Major General Maſſey ſhould with a Body of Horſe march into England to joyn with a Party in Lancaſhire, who were were by a prefixt time to be in Arms: but in the midſt of theſe endeavours all their hopes were blaſted by the taking of a Ship at Ayr in Scotland, which had been bound to the Earl of Derby in the Iſle of Man, and the ſeizing of Mr. Berkenhead an Agent in the buſineſs, by whoſe Letters all was detected, and thereupon were apprehended, Mr. Thomas Cook of Grays-Inn, Mr. Gibbons a Taylor, and Mr. Potter an Apothecary, together with Mr. Love, Mr. Jenkins, and Doctor Drake and ſeveral other Presbyterian Miniſters, who were brought before a High Court of Juſtice, and tried for their lives, and about the later end of July, Gibbons, Potter, and Love were ſentenced to death, and a while after Gibbons and Love were executed; for at this time the Engliſh Parliament thought it neceſſary to ſhew ſome ſeverity to the Presbyterian Party, to deter them from joyning with the Scots upon their coming with the King into England, which was dayly expected.

The intended riſing in Lancaſhire unfortunately diſappointed.

Mr. Love & others tried for their lives.

Love and Gibbons executed.

Cromwel finding his Proviſion begin to be ſcarce, marched on the 3 of July cloſe to the Scotch Trenches, and drew up his Army in Battalia, to provoke them to Battel; whereupon they in the night planted moſt of their Cannon on the brow of the Hill, and the next morning ſaluted the Engliſh with fifty great ſhot, which made Cromwel draw back, and give over a reſolution he had to force the Trenches; but ſince he could not effect any thing here, he made it his next work to land ſome of his Forces on Fife-ſide; and for that ſervice Col. Overton was ſent with 1600 foot, and four Troops of Horſe, who at Queensferry without much difficulty forced his landing & Cromwel at the ſame time marched up with his whole Army cloſe to the Scots, with an intent to have fallen upon their Rear, in caſe they ſhould have moved that way to diſturb the enterenterprize. Yet to drive the Engliſh out of Fife 4000 Horſe and Foot were appointed to march againſt them, under the Command of Sir John Brown, which was not done ſo privately, but Cromwel had notice of it, and he ſent Major General Lambert and Colonel Okey with two Regiments of Horſe and two of Foot, who were tranſported over the water, and being united with the reſt, they engaged Sir John Brown, and gave him an overthrow, and took himſelf and Colonel Buchanan and fourteen hundred more priſoners, and ſlew about two thouſand; by which Victory the Engliſh gained ſo firm a footing in Fife, that they were not eaſily to be repelled: and ſoon after Brunt-Iſland, and a ſtrong Caſtle upon the River called Inchgarvy were taken by ſurrender. And now the King and his Army were neceſſitated to take that courſe which long ſince had been deſigned, to march directly for England. Cromwel that he might make himſelf maſter of the Paſs at Sterlin, reſolved firſt to ſet upon St. Johnſtons, which after one days Siege was gained. And the King 1651. as soon as he had knowledge of this loss, marched with his Army with all haste Southwards : this departure of the King altered Cromwels designs upon Sterlin, and he drew his Forces back again over the Frith, making what expedition he could to overtake his Majesty ; but the Scots were many days march before him. Major General Harrison with about 3000 Horse and Dragoons that lay neareſt England, had Orders to march to attend the Kings motions, and Major General Lambert with about as many more was appointed by advice of a Councel of War, to speed after them,& endeavour to fall upon their Rear ; and Cromwel himself began his March from Leith with a thousand Horse and Foot, the very same day the Royal Army entred upon English ground by the way of Carliſle, which was on the 6 th. of August. Upon the expectation of the Kings com- into England, a party in North-Wales began to rise, intending to have joyned with the Earl of Derby, who was to come from the Isle of Man ; but this design undertaken, as it was, precipitately, and managed without order, soon vanisht to nothing.

St. Johnstons taken by Cromwels forces.

The King enters England with his Army.

By that time the King was come with his Army as far as Lancaſhire, he was somewhat hard beset both by the Forces that followed him out of Scotland, and those that in a short time were raised in England against him : he had in his Rear Generall Cromwel, (who had left General Monk Commander in Chief in his absence with a small dis-joynted force to carry on the work in Scotland :) in his Van were the two Major Generals Lambert and Harriſon, who by long Marches got before him, unto whom there came up two thousand of the Countrey Militia out of Staffordſhire, and four thousand under the Command of Colonel Birch out of Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, and other parts ; and to flank him, the Lord Fairfax in Yorkſhire appeared in the field with many Troopes : Moreover, the City of London poured out a good part of its Militia, and the adjacent Counties, were by strict Order of the Parliament enjoyn'd to set out men and Horses at their own charges: nor (which was the worst presage) did the Scotch Army it self keep entire, being curtailed of about five thousand men, which dropt away by degrees, there remaining not compleat, as was generally supposed, by that time they came to Worceſter thirteen thousand men. The Kings hopes also failed him of the general coming in of the Country ; for the most considerable supply that came to him, was only one Troop of Horse commanded by Capt. Cicil Howard, Son of the L. Howard of Eſtrich: nor is it much wondr'd at, since the Parliaments Forces had so powerfully overspread the Countrey, that none could well have the opportunity to stir in behalf of the King ; so that before the deciding blow was given, they appeared to be in a very lost and hopeless posture: but the condition of the Scotch Army at this time is best discovered in some intercepted Letters of the Earl of Lauderdale and others : In one of the Earls, he writes thus :

The great opposition that he meets with,

The Earl of Lauderdales Intercepted Letters.

Never men (saith he in one of them) were more hearty, for all their toyl, and seriously you would not know this Army; a natural purge is whol-some, (speaking of those that withdrew themselves) and I hope ours is so, since the ill humors are gone. The Country is kind, & we might have men enough. His Majesty received the Lord Howards Son gratiously, and Knighted him ; he is the first, but I have no reason to believe he will be the last that will return to his duty. 1651.

And in another he hath to this effect :

His Majesty is advanced into England as far as Perith with a very good Army, able by the blessing of God to do his business. They are, I dare say, near double the number of those with which the * King of Sweden entred Germany : never was any Army so regular as we have been since we came into England ; I dare say, we have not taken the worth of six pence ; and what you hear of our misfortune in Fife, or what ever our Enemies print or write, trust none ; this is the best Scots Army that ever I saw, and I hope shall prove best. All those that were unwilling to hazard all in this cause with their King, have upon a specious pretence most of them left us. This is a natural purge, and will do us much good.

* 6000 Men were all with which the King of Sweden first entred Germany.

And the Lord Wentworth in a Letter to my Lord Crofts, writes thus, By Gods Grace we are come as far as Perith in Cumberland, with a good Army of fourteen or fifteen thousand Foot, and six thousand Horse, all absolutely at the Kings Command, as much as any Army that ever I saw under the Command of his Father.

The Lord Wentworths Letter to the L. Crofts

But in one of Duke Hamiltons to the same Lord, things appear not so well as those Relations describe, his Letter says thus ;

We are now laughing all at the ridiculousness of our present state : We have quit Scotland being scarse able to maintain it, and yet we grasp at all, and nothing but all will satisfie us, or to lose all. I confess, I cannot tell you whether our hopes or fears are greatest ; but we have one stout Argument, Despair, for we must now either stoutly fight, or die : all the Rogues have left us, I shall not say, whether for fear or disloyalty ; but all now with his Majesty are such as will not dispute his Commands.

Duke Hamiltons to the same.

The King at his first entrance upon English ground was proclaimed King of Great Britain at the Head of the Army with great acclamations and shooting off the Cannon, he being then at Perith in Cumberland, and so afterwards at every Market-Town through which he marcht. He met no considerable resistance till he came to Warrington-Bridge, where Lambert endeavoured to impede his passage, but the King made his way through with loss to his opposer ; and the Parliament at London began to apprehend the prosperity of his fortune ; but his wearied forces could not it seems hold out a march of that length, so that he came on the 22 th. of August to Worceſter, where after one or two Repulses by the Forces that kept that City, he quickly entred, through the ready assistance of the Inhabitants, who not only not opposed, but also helpt to beat the Parliaments Souldiers out of the Town. Advice came to the King of the distracted condition of those in London, which occasioned a debate in Councel there-1651. thereupon for his repair thither, but upon the result it was resolved on as a thing most agreeable to their present condition to stay where they were, and to make good all the Passes that were thereabouts for their better security. On the 27 th. of August they kept a solemn Fast, and the next day had a general Rendezvouze, at which the Countrey came in far more considerably than at any time before, since their arrival in England. The King as he was in his march to Worcester, dispatched away Messages and invitations unto several Governours of Towns and Castles, to deliver up unto his use those places which they had of his in their possession, and principally to Sir Thomas Middleton Governour of Chirk-Castle in Shropshire, and to Colonel Mackworth Governour of Shrewsbury: To the first the Earl of Derby also writ, and the Letters were sent by one Simkins, whom Sir Thomas caused to be seized and sent to Wrexham: To the Governour of Shrewsbury both a Letter and a Summons were sent by a Trumpetter, which we think remarkable enough to be here inserted, together with his Answer, to shew the temper of those then in Authority.

The Kings Letter and Summons to Col. Mackworth Governor of Shrewsbury.

Colonel Mackworth:

Having sent you herewith a summons to render into my hands my Town, with the Castle of Shrewsbury, I cannot but perswade my self you will do it, when I consider you a Gentleman of an ancient house, and of very different Principles (as I am informed) from those with whom your employment ranks you at present. If you shall peaceably deliver them unto me, I will not only pardon you what is past, and protect you and yours in your persons, and all that belongs to you, but reward so eminent & seasonable a Testimony of your Loyalty with future trust and favour, and do leave it to your self to propose the Particular, being upon that condition ready to grant you presently any thing you shall reasonably desire, and to approve my self

Your friend

C. R.

The Summons was in these words:

Colonel Mackworth:

Being desirous to attempt all fair ways for recovering our own, before we proceed to force and extremity, and (where the Controversie is with subjects) accounting that a double Victory, which is obtained without effusion of Blood, whereby the hearts, that of right belong to us, are gained as well as their strengths: We do hereby summon you to surrender unto us our Town with the Castle of Shrewsbury, as in duty and Allegeance by the Laws of God and the Land you are bound to do, thereby not only preventing the mischiefs which you may otherwise draw upon your self and that place, but also opening the first door to peace and quietness and the enjoyment of every one both King and People, of that which appertains to them, under certain and known Laws, the end for which we are come. Given at Our Camp at Tong-Norton, this 20 th. of August.

Unto this Letter and Summons the Governour returned this answer.

For the Commander in Chief of the Scotish Army.

SIR,

By your Trumpet I received two Papers, the one containing a Proposition, the other a direct summons for the Rendition of the Town and Castle of Shrewsbury, the Custody whereof I have received by Authority of Parliament; and if you believe me a Gentleman (as you say you do) you may believe I will be faithful to my Trust; to the violation whereof neither allurements can perswade me, nor threatning of force, especially when but Paper ones, compel me. What Principles I am judged to be of, I know not, but I hope they are such as shall ever declare me honest, and no way differing herein (as I know) from those engaged in the same imployment with me, who, should they desert that cause they are embarqued in; I resolve to be found, as I am immoveable, the faithful servant of the Commonwealth of England.

H. Mackworth.

About two or three days before the Kings arrival at Worcester, the Earl of Derby having landed at Weywater in Lancashire, came to him with two hundred and fifty Foot and sixty Horse, which he brought with him out of the Isle of Man, and immediately returning back into Lancashire to raise a more considerable force, he soon gathered about 1200 men, and so much was he beloved in those parts: that a little more time had made him formidable: with these he was marching upon a design to fall upon Cromwels own Regiment then quartered at Lancaster in their march towards him; but news came to him of Colonel Lilburnes approach towards him with ten Troops of Horse (which were ordered out of Yorkshire on purpose to hinder his Levies) and two Regiments of Cheshire Foot: The Earl nothing dismayed at this Force, resolved to engage Lilburn and his party, before the other Troops could come to him, and accordingly he charged them so furiously, that he routed the first Troops, and had made an impression so far into their Body, that they began to be disordred, till the accession of fresh Reserves both of Horse and foot so overpowred his numbers, that they were totally vanquished: most of the Kings party were Horse, and the fight was in Lanes, where they were much annoyed by the Enemies Musquettiers. There were taken prisoners of Quality, the Lord Widdrington, Sir Thomas Tiderisley, Colonel Matthew Boynton, Sir Francis Gamul, Major Trollop, Sir William Throgmorton, Colonel Richard Legg, Colonel Ratcliff, Gerard, and some others whose names we know not, and many of these named died of their wounds. The Earl of Derby (having lost his George and Garter) fled with about thirty Horse towards Worcester, having sheltred himself one night in his way in a house called Boscobel, which Heaven by this means had prepared for the Kings retreat and preservation.

The Earl of Derby comes with forces to the King.

The Earl of Derby routed by Col. Lilburn.

By this time Cromwel had surrounded Worcester with his spreading Host, in as near a compass as the Rivers and Passes would suffer him, the Kings Army as yet lying out of the Town a mile in the fields. The first Pass endeavoured to be taken

The Scots having thus abandoned the place where they were, it was preſently poſſeſt by a ſtrong party of Horſe and foot, in order to the preſent advance of the reſt of the Army.

The Kings Army were drawn up very near to Worceſter, and made many excurſions, breaking down two or three Bridges over the River Team betwixt the Enemy and them, and ſhewing a well ordered and governed courage; but September the 3 d. that ominous day being arrived, Cromwel reſolved to venture the event upon its former Auſpicia, and to that purpoſe having his Boats in readineſs, he paſſed over his men in the afternoon of that day, and drew them all into a fighting poſture, and having given the ſignal to the whole Army to fall on, the fight was begun in this manner.

Worceſter Fight.

Cromwel himſelf in perſon (about four of the Clock with his Life-Guard and Colonels Hackers Regiment of Horſe, with part of his own Foot Regiment, with the intire Regiments of Colonel Ingoldsby and Colonel Fairfax, marched directly towards the City, and after him Lieutenant General Fleetwood advanced with Colonel Goffs and Major General Deans Regiments; the Kings forces encountring them at the hedges betwixt the City and them, and diſputing every field with them, in ſuch order and with ſuch gallantry, that thoſe already engaged (leſt they ſhould be wholly diſcouraged with the hotneſs of the ſervice) were relieved by reſerves, and they by others, no conſiderable progreſs was yet made, the Highlanders proving excellent fire-men, and coming to the but-end of Muſquet, till wearied with continual action, and their Ammunition ſpent, the King (being then upon the place) commanded them in ſome haſte into the City, and haſtened himſelf to the other ſide, where Colonel Hayns his Regiment with Cobbets ſtood about Powick-Bridge, and were entertained with no leſs man-hood and ſlaughter, than thoſe on the other ſide; and though one Colonel Matthews was the Reſerve to theſe two Regiments, yet did the Scotch foot fairly drive them from their ground, till at laſt being harraſſed out, and no ſeconds or ſupplies to be expected, in a careleſs regard of the Enemy, as if they feared not to make which way they pleaſed, they drew likewiſe into the Town, as did another Brigade which oppoſed the Regiments of the Lord Gray, and Colonel Gibbons joyned with two others on an other part. The Kings Army was drawn very cloſe together, and ſent out ſeveral Bodies, who charged very briskly on the Generals ſide, where the fight was hotteſt, (He having brought on the Militia forces to relieve his other Troops.) In the head of one of theſe Bodies the King himſelf charged with marvellous gallantry and conduct, and preſs'd ſo hard upon Cromwels Life-Guard, that the Troop was very much diſordered, and the Captain very dangerouſly wounded; and in another Charge Duke Hamilton, (who behaved himſelf with undaunted courage and reſolution) received a ſhot on his thigh, whereof preſently after he died.

Duke Hamilton ſlain at this fight.

The Militia Regiments of Eſſex, Surry, and Cheſhire were much annoyed by the Scots, and many of their men ſlain, but Cromwel drew on freſh and entire Brigades and Regiments, which were in reſerve, of the Veterane bands, by which the Royaliſts were ſo overpowred, that they were forced to retreat into the City, which they could not do with ſuch order, but many of the Cromwellians got in with them; Leſley with 2000 Horſe (upon what account not known) not ſtirring out of the Town to relieve his party, when the enemy entred. The King retired to his Quarters for a while, and about 7. at night the Enemy gained the Fort Royal; at which time his Majeſty left the City, paſſing out at St. Martins Gate, accompanied with about ſixty Horſe of the chiefeſt and moſt confident of his Retinue, (though many more preſſed to bear him company) and it was reported that Cobbet very narrowly miſt of him as he left his lodging.

The King defeated at Worceſter, but made his eſcape.

The Enemies foot was now got into the Town, and according to their order fell a plundering the Inhabitants in a moſt barbarous manner, giving no Quarter to any that they found in the ſtreets: and through this their greedineſs of ſpoil, they kept the Gates ſhut, and the Horſe out, leſt they ſhould have ſhared the better part; and thereby favoured (as God would have it) the Kings eſcape: ſome Scots who had got into one of the Churches held out till next morning, when they obtained Quarter for life; by which time there was not an Inhabitant in Worceſter, friend or foe, left worth a ſhilling of what they had in the Town; but the Royal Inhabitants loſt leaſt by the ravage (being ſupplied with freſh Wares to their deſires by the honeſt Citizens of London without any ſcruple of credit or payment, and their debts were forborn till ſuch time as God ſhould enable them to pay, which the Gentry and Inhabitants round about them endeavoured to bring to paſs, by their more than ordinary reſort to that Market for all neceſſaries and upon all occaſions. The Mayor (who was Knighted by the King) and all the Aldermen were committed to priſon, and the wife of one Guyes (whoſe husband for betraying the deſigns of the King in that Garriſon, was hanged) was rewarded by the Parliament with 200 lib. per annum, and 200 lib. in money.

Worceſter miſerably plundered.

There were ſlain in the field, in the Town, and in purſuit ſome 2000. and about 8000 were taken priſoners in ſeveral places; moſt of the Engliſh Common-men eſcaping by their Shibboleth; But at Newport in the purſuit there were taken, the Earl of Lauderdale, Earl of Rothes, Earl of Carnworth, Earl of Kelly, Earl of Derby, Earl of Cleveland, the now Earl of Shrewsbury, Sir John Packington, Lord Spyne, Sir Ralph Clare, Sir Charles Cunningham, Colonel Graves, Maſter Richard Fanſhaw, Secretary to the King, many alſo whoſe names we have not, (viz.) 6 Colonels of Horſe, 13 of Foot, 9 Lieutenant Colonels of Horſe, 8 Lieutenant Colonels of Foot, 6 Majors of Horſe, 13 Majors of Foot, 37 Captains of Horſe, 72 Captains of Foot, 55 Quarter-Maſters, 89 Lieutenants; there were taken alſo ſome General Officers, with 76 Cornets of Horſe, 99 Enſigns of Foot, 90 Quartermaſters, 80 of the Kings Servants, with the

Kings

1651. Kings Standard, which he had ſet up when he ſummoned the Countrey, the Kings Coach and Horſes, and Collar of SS, but the Kings Perſon they had no power to touch, which recompenſed all the other loſs.

He (as was ſaid before) departed in the dusk, leaving Colonel Careleſs in his Rear, to keep the Enemie in diſpute, while he was ſomething forward on his way,& the approaching night might favour his eſcape. To which end, all perſons about him were commanded to ſpeak French, and a preſent Conſultation was held which courſe they ſhould ſteer, and it was reſolved by my Lord of Derby, that they ſhould make what ſpeed they could, and recover a place called Whiteladies before morning, which was ſome 25 miles from Worceſter; and thereupon one Maſter Giffard then in the company, was called for his guidance thither; and one Walker (that had been formerly a Scout-maſter in the Kings Army) was his aſſiſtant, yet the way was miſtaken as they paſſed a Heath, but by good providence ſoon recovered.

The King deliberates whither to flye.

Betwixt three and four a clock the King reached this place, and Maſter Giffard (after ſome knocking at the door,) called up one George Penderill, a Servant in the Houſe, who hearing and knowing his voice, ran down in his ſhirt and opened the door, and the King and his Retinue entred; where after a little debate about the ſecurity of his perſon, the ſaid Earl having called thither William Penderill the Houſe-keeper of Boſcobell, and diſpatch'd another towards Tong to ſee if the Coaſt was yet clear; His Majeſty in the mean while had his hair cut off, and his Buff-doublet and Linnen-breeches buried, and he was diſguiſed in Countrey habit, with adjuration of the fidelity of the Pendrills (who were now with their Brother in Law George Yates in number five) committed & entruſted by the E. of Derby to their fidelity, which they moſt ſolemnly and dutifully promiſed. Then the Earl and the reſt of the Lords, viz. the Duke of Buckingham and that Train, with tears took their leave (Derby would have ſtaid, but there was no probability of ſecrecie for two) and my Lord Wilmot with John Pendrill withdrew himſelf from that company to another retreat; the reſt (except the Duke who lay concealed in other friends houſes about that Countrey) were taken as aforeſaid at Newport by Lilburns Horſe, the ſame who had defeated the Earl of Derby, who now rendred himſelf a Priſoner to one Captain Edge of Lancaſhire, on promiſe of quarter for life.

The Lords leave him at Whiteladies

As ſoon as the King was thus left by his Company, with a Wood-bill in his hand, he was conducted into a Wood or Coppice neer adjoyning, taking the name of William Jones a Wood-cutter, newly come thither for work, and was accordingly inſtructed in his Tongue and Behaviour: That day proved very wet, ſo that Yates his Wife brought him a blanket to cover him, and a diſh of Milk and Apples for his refreſhment; and at night againſt his coming home (where the Mother of the Pendrills at her Son Richard's houſe, moſt joyfully welcom'd him) and provided an ordinary Countrey Supper, which ended; the King with Richard his guide reſolved for Wales, and went to one Maſter Wolfes of Madely, where for fear of ſearch, he was fain to take up his Quarters in the Barn, where Maſter Wolfe and his Wife attended on him. Here his Majeſty underſtood that the paſſes over the Water, and the River Wy, were ſo guarded, that it was unſeaſonable for him to adventure into Wales, ſo that on Friday night he retreated in his woollen accoutrements about his legs (in which he had lain in that hard lodging in great pain and ſoreneſs) to Boſcobell, where he found Colonel Careles (who had alſo betaken himſelf thither for ſhelter; and by his direction, that Saturday the King went into the Wood, (from the pleaſantneſs whereof the houſe took its name,) and by Ladders aſcended into the top of that moſt celebrated Oak, which being thick with branches ſtretching and ſhadowing fore-right, was altogether impervious to the ſight; and here the Colonel bore him company while he laid his head, and ſlept upon a pillow in his lap. At night they both deſcended, and came into the houſe and refreſh'd themſelves, and the King perceiving the ſecrecie of the place, was not willing to keep longer abroad. He paſt away the Sunday in a kind of Arbour or Banquetting-houſe at the end of the Garden, and there John Pendrill came to him from my Lord Wilmot, to conduct him to Mr. Whitgraves houſe at Moſeley; whither with much difficulty and danger he himſelf had arrived, but the ſafety there anſwered all. The King approved of my Lord Wilmots advice, and on Monday night (with the guard of the five brethren) and the help of the Millers horſe, he came to Mr. Whitgraves, where he was gladly received by my Lord and that Gentleman, and conveyed into a ſecret place; and there it was conſidered what courſe to take for a further progreſſion in the Kings eſcape: & to this purpoſe one Colonel Lane of Bently was made acquainted with it, and by them it was agreed, that Miſtreſs Jane Lane upon pretence of aſſiſting at the Child-bed of her Siſter, ſhould ride to Briſtol, and the King as her Servant ride before her, with one Mr. Laſſels and his Wife behind him, and a Paſs for their more ſecurity in travel was procured.

He quarters in a Barn at Madely.

Comes to Boſcobel, where Col. Careles directs him to the Oak.

To Maſter Whitegraves at Moſeley.

Mrs. Jane Lane undertakes to convey him to Briſtol.

On their way thither, my Lord Wilmot (as of chance) met with them, having a Hawk on his fiſt, and ſo they journeyed together to Bromſgrave, where the Kings Horſe loſing a ſhooe, He was forc'd to carry his Horſe to a Farrier, who inquiring of News of the King, and being anſwered by his Majeſty, that he believed the King was eſcaped into Scotland, he replied, that no doubt the King was ſecretly ſomewhere in England, and wiſh'd he knew where, for that he could get a 1000 l. by taking of him. The King departing from thence, comes to Eveſham, where adviſing how to avoid Troopers then grazing their Horſes in the Meadows adjoyning, they lighted upon them in a near Village as they rode, but they civilly let them paſs on their way to Cirenceſter to the Crown, where they lodged that night, and went the next day towards Briſtol within three Miles of the City, to the houſe of Mr. Norton of Leigh, the deſigned journeys end. Here the King feigned himſelf ſick, and took his Chamber by 1651. by the order and care of Mrs. Lane; but the next morning coming into the Cellar, he was taken notice of by the Butler, one John Pope, a Souldier formerly in the late Kings Army, who upon an intent look discerned him, and in all dutiful manner discovered himself to him, with such assurance of fidelity, that he gained his Majesties belief so far, as to be imployed by him in getting a Ship for his transportation: thence the King was conducted by my Lord Wilmot to one Colonel Windhams House at Trent in Dorset-shire, where he continued almost three weeks in expectation of a passage from Lime: Soon after his arrival here, Mrs. Jane Lane with Mr. Lassels parted, being openly entertained as Kinsfolk, and came in safety back again to Stafford-shire.

The King at Colonel Windhams.

My Lord Wilmot and he prevail'd with a Merchant to procure a Pass, but were disappointed.

The occurrences that hapned here, we cannot certainly relate, only the King was disappointed of a passage which a Merchant had procured for him at Lime, (by my Lord Wilmot and Colonel Windhams means;) and though the fault was was not in the Merchant, but the dejected spirit of the Master of the Bark; yet this disappointment had like to have proved the Kings ruine, by the shooing of my Lord Wilmots Horse, (there was one Mr. Hen. Peters that attended him for his Guide.) The Hostler and the Smith discovered by the shooes, that they were come somewhere from the Northern parts by their manner of nailing, and presently raised a rumour of the Kings being thereabouts; and whilst the Smith went to advise with a Minister of the matter, my Lord was got a way by providence, and the King came to Bridport, where as 'tis since reported, he had like to have been known by an Hostler, as he was setting up the Horses, who welcom'd him as having formerly seen him at Exeter, but did not distinguish who he was, and the King with a proffer of drinking with him when he was more at leisure, withdrew himself from any further discovery. That night they touched at Broad-Windsor, where again the King met with some disturbance by Souldiers then filling those places, in order to their shipping for Jersey. But after all these surprising adventures, he got again to Colonel Windhams, with the Lord Wilmot, who had overtaken them, and passed by them at Bridport as was agreed, and thence (for it could not be safe to continue longer in that place) he was sent to Salisbury to look out for another Sanctuary, and to confer to that purpose with Master Coventrey, who agreed to bring him to Mrs. Hides house at a Village called Heal. The King in his way to Salisbury came to a Town called Mere to the George, an acquaintance of the Colonels, where drinking in the Cellar, the Hoste seeing the King stand off as a servant, said, Thou lookest like an honest Fellow, Here's an Health to the King; who unreadily answering it, made the man expostulate with the Colonel what Fellow he had brought.

He is received by Mrs. Hide at Heal.

The King from Mere went to the House of Mrs. Hide, and was joyfully there received, and introduced to a secret place in the House, and here Colonel Robert Phillips came to him, and Col. Windham took his leave of his Majestie, and returned; and Dr. Hinchman after made Bishop of London, had the honour to be made acquainted with his condition; and Phillips was presently dispatch'd to procure some shipping at Southampton, where the Barks being all taken up, and employed by the Parliament, he returned with his labour lost, but meeting with Colonel Gunter, he (being informed of the business) undertook to provide a Bark at Brighthemstead in Sussex, which he effected, and thither the King (and my Lord Wilmot) having taken leave of this Noble Matron and the Doctor, accompanied with Colonel Phillips, (passing by night near Portsmouth,) came in two daies to an Inne at Brighthemstead; where Colonel Gunter and one Master Maunsel the Merchant, who at Gunters request hired the Ship, and the Ship-master Tetersball (now a Captain in his Majesties Navy) met him, and at Supper they sate down together with his Majesty, when the Master presently discovered him, having formerly seen him in the Downs, when he obtained the release of his Ship loaden from Newcastle; whereupon the King conferr'd with the Master, who (being wrought upon by promises, and money paid down, and his own loyalty) agreed to transport him to France, and departed to call up his Mariners then on shore, (pretending his Ship half laden with coals was a drift;) but coming home for a bottle of Aqua-vitæ, his Wife by the unseasonableness of the night suspecting the truth, encouraged him to the undertaking, not caring (as she said) if she and her little one begged their bread, so the King were in safety. About five of the clock in the dark of the morning on the 20*th*. of October the King embarqued, with my Lord Wilmot, & keeping the shore all that day, in the evening crost over, and at dark night landed neer Diep in France. In their passage, the King sitting upon the Deck, and directing the course, or, as they call it, conning the Ship, one of the Mariners blowing Tobacco in his face, the Master bid him go further off the Gentleman, who murmuring, unwittingly replyed, That a Cat might look upon a King. At Rouen the King had his clothes changed by two English Merchants residing there, and was there saluted (though at first hardly known) by Dr. Earls late Bishop of Salisbury, and upon notice of his arrival, the Queen-Mother and the Duke of Orleans, and that whole Court went out to meet him, and congratulate his wonderful deliverance: A Providence indeed not parallel'd in History, and able to have convinced his Rebells, if their rage had not blinded them; but it cheared the minds and hopes of his Subjects, by this Pledge of their deliverance from thraldome, in this marvellous protection of Gods Anointed; (no less than two and fifty persons being privy to his Escape.)

He is safely transported into France by Tetersball.

He is met by the Queen-Mother, and Court of France.

Very few of the Nobles and Officers that came in with him from Scotland escaped, David Lesly and Lieutenant General Middleton were taken in Lancashire, and carried Prisoners to Chester, from whence with the Earl of Lauderdale, Kelly, Rothes, and others they were committed to the Tower, from whence my Lord Middleton happily escaped, the rest were not long after sent to Windsor-Castle, where they continued till the Restitution of the King to his Government.

Most of the Scots taken Prisoners.

On the 21*th*. of September Cromwell came to London,

1651. London, and was met about Acton with the Speaker and the Members of Parliament, and the Lord Mayor of London and Recorder Steel, who in a set Speech congratulated his great successes, and like a false Prophet, by a mistaken Prolepsis, applied to him these words of the Psalmist, To bind their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of iron, in an arrogant exaltation of his Atchievement: next day the Common prisoners (being driven like a herd of Swine) were brought through Westminster into Tuthil fields (a sadder spectacle was never seen, except the miserable place of their defeat) and there sold to several Merchants, and sent to the Barbadoes; the Colours taken were likewise hanged up in Westminster-Hall, with those taken before at Preston and Dunbar.

Cromwel comes with his prisoners to London.

We have hitherto without any digression related the fortune of the King from the time of his quitting Scotland to his safe arrival in France; but we shall now briefly describe the transactions that passed in Scotland at that time: Cromwel when he left the King constituted (as is hinted) General Monk Commander in Chief of the English Army there; which was an Action that carried great envy with it from those of his own party, because Monk had but lately engaged with them; and it was objected, that he had been heard to say, he would never draw a Sword in England against the King or his Interest, and therefore they could not expect faithful service from him in Scotland against the same party; but it is said, he gave such assurance to Cromwel of his fidelity in that station against that people, (who were the first raisers of those unhappy storms that overspread our Nation with the miseries of War and sedition) that he would not be perswaded to alter his choice.

The English Army left with the General exceeded not six thousand men, and many of these were sick and weak by long marches, but they had by several successful encounters gained a great reputation, and the Scots were much dispirited thereby, so that whilst the sound part of his forces was in good heart & his enemies dejected, he immediately march'd to Sterlin, and came thither by that time Cromwel got into England.

Sterlin was at that time governed by Colonel Cunningham, who was so surprized at the sudden approach of the English Army, (believing them to be of much greater numbers then they really were) that after a short siege he surrendred the Town and Castle upon Articles on the 14*th*. of August; where the Kings Royal Robes, the cloath of State, and all the Scotch Records were found & seized, together with five thousand Arms and forty piece of Ordinance, and great store of Ammunition; but all the goods of private persons there deposited, were delivered to such as would own them: over the door of the Chappel that belongs to the Castle this Motto in the time of King James was written, J. C. R. Nobis hæc invicta miserunt Centum sex Proavi 1617. which shews that that place had remained unconquered during the Reigns of an hundred and six Kings, and so continued all his time and his Sons.

Sterling with the Castle surrendred to General Monk.

The next place to which the General marched after the taking of Sterlin was Dundee, to which Town the chief of the Inhabitants of Edenburgh and many other Towns and places had conveyed the best part of their Moveables, as a secure depository, so that there was great riches in it. 1651.

Major Lumsdain was Governour of the Town, who had therein eight hundred Souldiers, besides some Companies of armed Inhabitants, whereby he thought himself in so good a condition, that when the General drew near the place, and sent a summons to him, he returned a very slighting answer: hereupon he environed the Town with his Army; but at his first coming thither, hearing that old General Lesly and several of the Lords of Scotland were met at Elliot (about fourteen miles from Dundee) to raise Souldiers, he sent Colonel Alured and Colonel Morgan with a thousand Horse and Dragoons to disturb the Levies, leaving privately the chief conduct and care of the design to his confident Colonel Morgan, the other (though the elder Colonel) being not very competent for such a service: These, as soon as they had their Orders marched in the night and took Scotch guides to shew them the way to the Town, and by the help of some few Scotch Souldiers who had revolted to the English, they so dissembled their march, that the Countrey took them for part of their own forces going to Elliot, so that they were got undiscovered beyond the Town about three of the Clock in the morning, and then they marched into it with little or no resistance, and took 300 Noblemen. Gentlemen, and Ministers, with about 70 of their Servants, the chief of which were General Lesly (who was found hid in a close Cubbord-bed) the Earls Marshal, Crawford Lindsey, and Keith, & the Lords Ogilby, Burgenny, Hume, & Lee with many other Knights, and Gentlemen of note; these were all shipt for London, but old Lesly putting in at Newcastle, was by the favour of Sir Arthur Hazlerig (then Governour thereof) permitted to stay in Northumland with one De la Val his Son-in-law upon promise to be a true prisoner.

Old General Lesly and divers other Scotch Nobles surprised at Elliot.

The General by this means had prevented all possibility of disturbance in his Siege, and seeing he could not by fair means prevail with the Governour to yeeld up the Town, though he knew by the surprize of Elliot all hope of relief failed, on the first of September he took it by storm, putting all to the Sword that were found in Arms. The Governour with some few for a while saved themselves in a Steeple, but were smothered out by the burning of wet straw, and then they yeelded on mercy to one Captain Kelly of Colonel Morgans Regiment, who was carrying him to the General with purpose to intercede for his life, because of the gallantry of his behaviour in defence of the Town, but as he was going with him, one Major Butler barbarously shot him dead. The Souldiers had very rich Booty in this Garrison, for it was at this time the richest Town in Scotland, and there were fixty Sail of Ships in the harbour. After this taking of Dundee, St. Andrews, Aberdeen, with other Towns, Castles, and strong places either voluntary submitted or rendred upon Summons.

Dundee taken by storm.

These successes did not mitigate the severity of the Rulers at Westminster, who about the end of September appointed a Court-Marshal to sit at Chester, for the Tryal of the Earl of Derby and 1651. several other Prisoners taken after the Battel at Worcester, or some little time before.

The Earl upon his Tryal pleaded the Quarter given him by Captain Edge that took him prisoner, which was over-ruled by the Court, and he was sentenced to be beheaded, and on the 15 th. of October, that rigorous Sentence was executed on him at Bolton in Lancashire; and for the same cause of Loyalty to their Sovereign, and by the same Court, Sir Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, Captain Benbow, and Captain Symkins were sentenced to death, and executed.

The Earl of Derby beheaded at Bolton in Lancashire.

This sad occasion obliges us to a further account of those English Royallists who were taken in, and after the same Battel of Worcester, amongst whom were (besides others mentioned) the Lord Grandison, Sir John Packington, Colonel Blague, Colonel Edward Broughton, and Major General Massey; these were all except Massey presently imprisoned in the Tower; but he being much wounded and tired with riding as he endeavoured to escape, delivered himself up to the Countess of Stamford, who secured him in her house till he was cured of his wounds, upon his engagement to be a true Prisoner; and when he was recovered, he was also sent to the Tower, from whence by a disguise not long after he made his escape. Colonel Wogan was much sought after by the pursuers, but he got safe to the Highlands in Scotland, being resolved to prosecute the Kings Quarrel where Nature had fixt her Non Ultra.

Several Royalists taken and imprisoned in the Tower.

There remained nothing in England of the antient Dominions and Territories thereof unsubdued to the Power of the Parliament, except the Isle of Man, and the Island of Jersey, and Castle Cornet in the Isle of Guernsey, which were all about this time surrendred to the Authority of the English Commonwealth, and not only these adjacent Islands, but what was in America appertaining to the Crown of England came quickly into their Jurisdiction, as did the Island of Barbadoes (whereof the Lord Willoughby of Parham was Governour for the King) which was yeelded up upon Articles to Sir George Ayscough about the beginning of January. The Articles were very favourable both to the Governour and Inhabitants, the first having liberty of returning to England, with freedom to his person and estate, and the later being indemnified for what ever they had done in hostility against the Parliament. It is said, the gaining of this Island was much facilitated by one Colonel Muddyford then in difference with the Governour, whom Sir George had drawn to his party, and by whose power and influence in the Island it was easily obtained. Hereupon the Islands of Mevis and St. Christopher thought it in vain to stand out, but both submitted to Sir George Ayscough.

The Isles of Man and Jersey, &c. surrendred to the Parliament.

Barbadoes yeelded up to Sir Geor. Ascue.

Towards the end of this year two eminent Commanders of the English Commonwealth were taken away by death, viz. General Edward Popham, one of the Generals at Sea; and Ireton, Son-in-law to Cromwel, and Deputy of Ireland, who died of a contagious feaver contracted at the Siege of the City of Limrick in Ireland, which after an obstinate resistance) he had newly gained. His Corps was transported to England, and brought to London, and interred in Henry the Sevenths Chappel in Westminster with a magnificent funeral pomp and state. He was no doubt a man of much dispatch, of dextrous and able parts, had they been imployed in honester designs; and was thought to have been a great contriver and prompter in the chiefest of his Father-in-laws stratagems. For a time after his decease, Lieutenant General Edmund Ludlow executed his Office, till Colonel Charles Fleetwood who had succeeded him in his wife, was thereby preferred to succeed him in the Deputiship of Ireland.

Popham and Ireton yeeld no Fate.

The English Commonwealth having in some measure quieted things at home, and thinking themselves in a fair way to a calm of Peace and Tranquility, took upon them now to give Laws to their subjected Dominions, as also to make Acts of Grace to encourage their Subjects quietly to submit to them: The first related to Scotland, which being in a short time totally brought under, (for besides the gaining of Dunbarton Castle, which was delivered up by Sir Charles Ereskin, and Dunnoter Castle which was taken by Colonel Morgan, and the Isles of Orkney, the Hebrides, and even Schetland, which is thought by some to be the same that the Ancients called Ultima Thule, could not scape their Conquest, which was the work of Colonel Overton) they take into consideration a project, which however it being attempted in former times, could be brought to no effect, they resolved to go through with; namely, an Union of England and Scotland, and Incorporating of both Nations into one Commonwealth: This was mainly opposed and remonstrated against by the Scotch Kirk, though in vain; for the Parliament of England, (as they called themselves) had resolved upon an Act for the Union of Scotland, and the Abolishing of Kingly Government in that Nation; intending that the Shires or Burghs should chuse their Deputies to represent them in Parliament, in such a proportionable number as the Parliament should think fit. And Commissioners were sent from hence in behalf of the Commonwealth of England, to treat concerning this Union with the Natives, whom they found but very cold entertainers of their Proffer, besides the tough opposition of the Clergy. These Commissioners were Oliver St. Johns, Sir Henry Vane, Major General Dean, Major Salway, Colonel Fenwick, and Alderman Tichburn: And not long after were sent down as Itinerant Judges to hear, determine, and make inspection into all things belonging to the Government of that Nation, Mr. George Smith, Mr. John Marck, Mr. Edward Mosely, and Mr. William Lockart, a Scotchman: But these Judges were several times altered at pleasure. But to the Commissioners there came in and submitted divers of the Scotch Nobility; as the Marques of Huntly, the Earls of Weems, Angus, and Caltnder, and the Lord Belcarris, and others; but of all that came in of the Nobility, the Marques of Argyle was he that most complied and adhered to the Commonwealth Interest, notwithstanding all the professions and shew he made when the King was in Scotland, and of the Lairds that acted amongst

The Parliaments Act of Oblivion.

The next Act of Grace was to England, and was an Act of Oblivion, wherein they publiſhed it to be their intention to forget all injuries, and pardon all hoſtilities hitherto committed againſt them, upon condition of taking an Ingagement, which they impoſed upon all people, wherein they were to promiſe To be true and faithful to the Common-wealth of England as then eſtabliſhed without King or Houſe of Lords; out of which nevertheleſs were excepted the Lord Goring and his Sons, Sir John Webſter of Amſterdam, the Executors of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the the ſlayers of Doriſlaus and Aſcham.

Scarce were theſe and ſome other little tranſactions finiſht at home, when there began to be in preparation new matter for the exerciſe of their Arms abroad, in reſpect of a ſecret grudge which had lain a pretty while ſmothering between them and their Brother States of Holland, which was probably in a great part occaſioned through the ſlight and indifferent reckoning of Doriſlaus, (whoſe Aſſaſſination they thought perhaps not ſufficiently inquired into;) and afterwards of their Embaſſadors Oliver St. Johns, and Walter Strickland, who being affronted by the common people in Holland, thought themſelves not ſufficiently vindicated by the States, nor reſpected according to the Dignity of their Maſters, and therefore came away in diſcontent; and though the States ſent hither afterwards as their Agent, Myn Heer Joachim with ſeveral Complements and excuſes, with Commiſſion to treat about a fair Correſpondence and Commerce with England; yet our States at Weſtminſter were now reſolved they ſhould not have their friendſhip on ſuch eaſie terms as before they offered by their Embaſſadors, ſince they then made no more account of it: ſo that they diſmiſt Joachim after a prefixt time, beyond which he was not to ſtay, & then proceeded to make an Act, For the Encouragement of Navigation; wherein they prohibited the importing of any Forein Commodities except upon Engliſh Bottoms, or ſuch as were of the Countrey whence the Commodities came; beginning withal to ſtand high upon claims of Dues and Reparations for the prejudice done us in our Trading: upon which occaſion was taken oftentimes to ſearch the Dutch Ships, and ſometimes to make prize of them. To complain of theſe damages, but more eſpecially, if it were poſſible, to obtain a ſuppreſſion of the ſaid Act ſo prejudicial to their Trade, they ſent over into England their Embaſſadors, Myn Heeren Catz, Van de Peere, Sharp, and Newport; theſe men however coming as moſt zealous Advocates for a ſpeedy Pacification, & relying much upon the favourable reception they ſhould meet with here, were nevertheleſs at their very firſt Audience accoſted with ſuch high demands about the Herring-fiſhing, the buſineſs of Amboyna, and a free Trade in the Schelde, from Middleburgh to Antwerp, that they were able to give but a cold account to their Maſters in the Affair they came about: and though ſome Meſſages for a while paſt to and fro for the Vindication of each others actions, (the Dutch all the while making great Proteſtations of their ſincere and real intentions towards this Commonwealth) yet ſtil preparations for War were privately made on both ſides. 1651.

The occaſion of the War with Holland.

This year ended with an Act for the Baniſhment of John Lilburn, who being a perſon of a turbulent nature, had with reſtleſs impatience oppugned all Government, in ſo much that it was ſaid merrily of him, If all the World were diſpeopled to him alone, John would be againſt Lilburn, and Lilburn againſt John. It was provided in this Act, that if ever he returned without leave from the State, he ſhould ſuffer as a felon. That which cauſed this ſeverity againſt him at this time was his violent oppoſition of Sir Arthur Hazlerig, a leading Member of the Parliament about a Coal-pit in his poſſeſſion, claimed by one Primate: wherein he did not only lay many oppreſſions and ſcandals to the charge of Hazlerig, but in the publication thereof arraigned the Juſtice of the whole Commonwealth. Lilburn baniſhed.

1652. The States of Holland ſet out a very great Fleet for the ſecurity of their Trade for this year, and in their inſtructions to Martin Harperz van Trump their Admiral, they directed him not to ſtrike his Flagg to the Engliſh Admiral, and the ſame Orders were given to every of the Ships of War, if occaſionally they met any ſingle Ships of England or others, that were not too numerous for their oppoſition. The Hollanders ſet forth a great Fleet.

The Engliſh on the other ſide they knew would not eaſily loſe the Dominion of the Sea, which in all ages they exerciſed without controul; ſo that Van Trump coming into Dover-Road on the 17*th.* of May with two and fourty Sail, lay there at Anchor, as to dare them to oppoſition, and notice thereof being given to Blake the Engliſh Admiral, he made haſte to ply up towards him with about 15 Ships and Frigats, but when Trump deſcried the Engliſh Fleet, he and his weighed Anchor, and ſtood away by a wind Eaſtward, intending (as Blake ſuppoſed) to leave them to avoid the diſpute of the Flagg; but about two hours after they altered their Courſe, and bore directly with the Engliſh Fleet, and Van Trump was headmoſt, whereupon the Engliſh lay by, and put themſelves into a fighting poſture, judging the Dutch had a reſolution to engage. Being come within Muſquet-ſhot, Blake gave Order to fire at his Flag, which was done thrice, and after the third ſhot, Trump let fly a broad-ſide, and it was well returned by the Engliſh Admiral; and after the exchange of Broad-ſides Major Bourn came in to Blakes aſſiſtance with eight good Ships, and then both the Fleets engaged from four in the afternoon till it was dark, and though there were not leſs than two thouſand ſhot of Cannon exchanged on one ſide and the other, the loſs of men was not great, and the greateſt was of the Hollanders, of whom one Ship was ſunk, and another taken, and about an hundred and fifty men ſlain; the Engliſh had not any Ship diſabled, and very few men killed. Van Trump drew his Fleet in the night to the back of Goodwin Sands, and the next morning ſailed away for Zealand. The firſt Sea fight between the Dutch and Engliſh. The Dutch come off with loſs.

The Holland Embaſſadors at London by their Memorials endeavoured all they could to per-1652. swade the Parliament, that this action of Trumps was without the privity or consent of their Masters, and thereupon demanded a restitution of the Ship taken by Blake in the fight; but the people at London were so inflamed with the news of the fight and Trumps carriage in it, that they insisted not on that demand, and the Parliament was necessitated to appoint a Troop of Horse to guard the Embassadors from the rage and fury of the multitude.

The States apprehended this business might cause a Rupture betwixt them and the English, and therefore they dispatched the Heer Paw to England in the Quality of an Embassador Extraordinary, who was so very well received at his arrival at London, that he believed he should not only extinguish the flame already kindled, but perfect that Negotiation formerly treated on by the other Embassadors. But in this he was much deceived, for when he and the other Embassadors had joyntly presented a paper to the Parliament to excuse the late enterprize of Trump, they returnd an answer that did not at all content them for they peremptorily required, To be paid and satisfied for all the Charges and damages they had been put to and sustained by the preparations of the States General, and other attempts this Summer, before they would treat on any other Proposition. The States of the United Provinces being advertised of this proceeding immediately recalled their Embassadors, and thereupon the War was vigorously prosecuted on both parts, and in a very little time Van Trump was again at Sea with an hundred and twenty sail of men of War; but he got not out soon enough to prevent General Blakes sailing Northward with seventy Sail of Ships of War to interrupt the Dutch fishing-Trade, and look for five Dutch East-India Ships which were about that time expected to return home that way.

Trump out again at Sea with an 120 Sail.

In the mean time about the 6th. of June Sir George Ascue arrived in the Downs with the Barbadoes fleet, consisting of 15 Men of War, having taken in his way ten Dutch Merchant-ships and four men of War, one whereof was a Ship of Advice, to give notice to their Merchant ships of the present differences.

The Parliament upon his arrival sent Orders to him to stay there till a fleet then providing in the Thames should be made ready to joyn with him.

Trump having intelligence thereof, about the beginning of July clapt in with part of his Fleet between Sir George and the River, and sent the other part Westward to prevent his going that way, resolving either to surprize those coming out of the Thames, or to sink and disperse those with Sir George Ascue; but the Governour of Dover gave so speedy advice of the posture of the Enemy, that the Navy in the River moved not, and then Trump on the eighth of July made towards Sir George to assail that fleet, but the wind failing, they came to an Anchor a League off, and before the next ebb, the Militia of that Countrey was ready upon the Coast, and Sir George his ships well re-inforced with men, and a Platform was cast up betwixt the Castles of Deal and Sandown, whereon good store of Cannon were planted to receive them, but at the next ebb whilst they were under sail the wind came about South-West, and blew so directly in their teeth, that they could not possibly make in to them. 1652.

Trump upon this disappointment, returned to Holland, to convey several Merchant-men for the Northern and Eastern Trade, that lay ready for him; with which he sailed towards the Sound, and in his way he received advice, that Blake had spoiled and dispersed their Herring-Fishing, and taken twelve Men of War that guarded them, and was with his fleet in Harbour about the Isles of Orkney, wherefore he sent part of his Ships to guard the Merchant-men on their Voyage, and with the rest he sailed to find out Blake, having met in his way the five East-India Ships, but when he came near those Northern Islands, such a storm arose, that he was forced to put to Sea, and his fleet was so scattered, that he came home but with two and forty sail, and three of the East-India ships, but shortly after the other two East-India ships, and all the fleet except six came home in safety; and Blake came safe to Yarmouth with all his fleet and six of Trumps Frigots, which he had met with and nine hundred Prisoners.

In this time Sir George Ascue had got a fleet together of about forty sail, with which he sailed to Plymouth to secure our Merchants-ships homeward bound, where there safely arrived five ships from the East-India's, and two from the Streights; Whilst Sir George lay there, De Ruyter was passing that way with a fleet of fifty men of War to convey about the like number of Merchant-ships that way: about two in the afternoon on the 16th. of August the English fleet got sight of the Enemy, and De Ruyter sent away his Merchant ships, and made ready for the fight, and about four Sir George with nine of his headmost ships charged through the Dutch fleet, and got the weather-gage of them, and charged them again, but the rest of his fleet being Merchant-men, and not coming up, and the night being already entred, both fleets drew off from each other; the Dutch into one of the French Ports, and Sir George to Plymouth to mend and repair the damages of the fleet; Captain Peck his Rear Admiral lost his Leg and soon after died, and several other Captains were wounded, but not one ship lost; what loss of men the Dutch sustained was not known, but none of their ships were disabled.

Sir George Ascue and De Ruyters engagement at Plymouth being the second combat with the Dutch.

Van Trump was at this time very much discontented upon some rumors spread of his failer of conduct in the last expedition, so that he desired the States that he might leave his charge and retire; the States seemed very unwilling to comply with his request, but at last they consented to it, and Wit Wittens was appointed in his place, to whom De Ruyter was joyned in Commission. These two Commanders made what speed they could to get their fleet to Sea, and in October they made their stations on the side of the North Foreland; Blake as soon as he had notice thereof hastned with his fleet towards them, having been on the Western Coast to Convey some Merchant ships homewards, and taken in his way five Dutch West-India ships of great value, and six Streigths men, valued at two hundred thousand pounds.

He

1652. He divided his fleet into three Squadrons, one commanded by himself, the other by Pen the Vice-Admiral, and the third by Rear-Admiral Bourn, and the 28 th. of October the fight was begun by Bourn, and seconded immediately by the whole fleet, wherein great courage was shown on both sides, the Rear-Admiral of the Dutch was boarded and taken, and two more of their ships were sunk, and one blown up, so that Wit Wittens was glad to give over the conflict, and to ply his Sails to get off, being pursued by the English fleet within twelve Leagues East South-East of the Maze, and he with the remainder of his torn and much shattered ships came into Goree. The English preserved all their ships, though many of them were much battered, and Blake came in triumph into the Downs.

De Wit worsted by Blake being the third engagement with the Dutch.

The Dutch were much troubled at the loss of this Combat, which was by Wittens imputed to the cowardise of some of his Commanders, and the disadvantage of the English Ships over them in number and strength.

But nevertheless the States thought it not convenient to hazard another Combat till they had a more sufficient fleet than before, both in the goodness and strength of their ships and the number also.

Both they and the English in the first beginning of the War had sent to the Swedes and Danes to invite them to their party, because the materials for shipping came from the Seas where these Princes had the chief Dominion; the Swedes were very favourable to us, and at least would be Neuters, if not partakers with us, and the Queen sent hither Monsieur Spiering her Embassador who died shortly after his arrival at London, and after his death Monsieur Appleboon succeeded: but the Danes declared for the States of the United Provinces against us; and about this time their King sent a Message to them that he was ready to succour them with twenty good ships of War, provided they would re-establish Trump in his late employment as Admiral: The States were very willing to comply with this proposition and Trump was again prevailed with to re-assume his former charge.

The Dane sides with the Dutch.

In the Levant Captain Badily with four or five English Frigots was set upon by Van Galen, who commanded a Fleet of sixteen Sail of Dutch-men of War in those Seas, in which encounter the Phœnix was taken by the Dutch, and the rest of our Ships were forc'd to retire under the protection of the Port of Longone; but Van Galen bought this Victory with the loss of his life, and the Phœnix was on the 20 th. of November regain'd by the valour of Captain Cox a former Lieutenant to the Same Ship.

The English come off with loss in the Levant.

Van Trump being restored to the office of Admiral, was very industrious to give a proof of his courage in some valiant enterprise; and to that purpose having got together eighty men of War, and ten Fire-ships, he sailed directly to the back-side of the Goodwin, neer the place where the former Battail was fought; Blake was in the Downs with few more than forty Sail, but was nevertheless resolved not to refuse an ingagement, and for that purpose he hoysed his sails to find out Trump, and sent out seven Ships to discover his Fleet, which were met with nine of the Dutch Ships sent out on the same errand. These began the Fight with their Canon, and immediately the two Generals advanced at the head of their Squadrons, and the Fight was very furious, and lasted from two in the morning on the 29 th. of November old style, till six in the evening. The Triumph, wherein Blake himself was with the Victory, and Vantguard bore most of the stress, being ingaged at one time with twenty of the best Dutch Ships, and though it was long doubted on which side the fortune of the day would turn, yet at last the numbers of the Dutch drew it to that side with the loss of the Garland and Bonaventure which were taken, and of one that was burnt, and three sunk; and indeed if the night had not been favourable to our retreat, the whole Fleet might have been in much danger. But the Dutch could not much boast of this Victory, for they lost many men, and one of their Flag-ships was blown up, and all the Mariners and Souldiers therein lost, except two; and the Ships of Van Trump and de Ruyter were much damaged. 1652.

The fourth combate with the Dutch.

Blake defeated in the Downs.

Blake after this defeat drew his shattered Fleet into the River of Thames to be repaired, and it is said, Trump triumphantly sail'd through the Channel with a Broom on his main Topmast, pretending to sweep the Channel of all English Shipping; and having sent home all his disabled Ships, after some little stay about Guernsey and the Western parts, he arrived at the Isle of Rhe to stay there for a Fleet of Merchants Ships which were to be convoy'd homewards. In the mean time all possible care was used by the English States to equippe a Fleet to meet him as he return'd, and General Monk was added to the number of the Generals at Sea, and General Deane being newly arrived from Scotland, was ordered to go to Sea with Blake and Monk; so that under the joynt command and conduct of these three Generals, the War at Sea was to be managed.

The expence of this War made this Parliament contrive all waies they could to husband their treasure, and because they thought the entertainment of the Duke of Glouceſter (whom since the murder of the late King they had kept at the Isle of Wight) too great an expence, they resolved to send him abroad, and about the beginning of February they sent him with two Servants to Dunkirk, promising to allow him a small exhibition for his maintenance, if he would not come neer his Brother, nor any of his relations.

The Duke of Glouceſter sent away to Dunkirk.

But as soon as he came on that side of the water, he was received according to his Birth and Quality, and from Bruxels he was attended to the Princess of Aurange at Breda, where he safely arrived to the great joy of her, and all the Royal Family, who had been in continual fear, that his life would be taken away by those that spared not the life of his Royal Father.

He is conveyed to Breda.

After he had been a while at Breda, he was conducted from thence by the Earl of Lauderdale to Paris to the King his Brother, to whom as also

From whence he is conducted to Paris to the King his Brother.

1652. also to his Mother the Queen and his other relations, he was welcom'd as one risen from the dead, and was very civilly treated by the King and Queen-Mother of France, and that whole Court.

The King of Denmarks confederacy with the States of Holland made the Parliament very solicitous to draw the Queen of Sweden to their interest, but she continued in a resolution of Neutrality, and offered her Mediation for a peace betwixt the two States, which yet took no effect; but the Dutch to strengthen their party, were very earnest with the French by their Embassador Boreel at Paris to conclude a League Offensive and Defensive with that Crown, and herein they doubted not to succeed, because the English were in a kind of hostility at this time with the French. For about the later end of August in this year, some of the Parliament Frigots had taken seven of the King of France his Ships which were going to the relief of Dunkirk then besieged by the Arms of Spain, by which means that Town came into the hands of the Spanjards: But the reputation of the English Commonwealth was at this time so great, that Cardinal Mazarine, who then managed the affairs of France endeavoured rather an accommodation with them, than otherwise; so that the Dutch missed of their purposes in that negotiation, and about the month of December Monsieur De Bourdeaux was dispatched as Agent from the King of France to acknowledg the English State. This action of the French at this time was looked on with much reflection by those that were friends to the Crown of England, for our King had by his excellent wisdom and address newly composed the Civil Commotions of of that Kingdom, wherein the Princes of the Blood had possessed themselves of Paris, and begun and formed a great Party against the King, demanding to have the Cardinal banished, and several real or pretended grievances redressed and so formidable were they grown, that the Cardinal withdrew himself to Colen for fear of them, and the Duke of Lorrain was on their behalf entred into the bowels of France with an Army, whereby a great effusion of Blood had ensued if his Majesties Mediation had not prevented it; by which the Crown of France was not only raised to a great lustre; but the Cardinal, whose fortune was by most men judged desperate, was with the peace restored to his former Authority and Greatness.

The Parliament solicits the Q. of Swedes to espouse their interest.

Mr. Bourdeaux sent Agent from the French King to the English States.

The King reconciles the differences between the King and Princes of France.

The States of Holland having advice that the Parliament was equipping a Fleet to be put to Sea under their three Generals, sent an express to Tromp (than at Rhe) to hasten away with what Merchant men were ready, and to block up the River of Thames to prevent their going out; Tromp upon receiving this Order made what haste he could; but contrary to the expectation of the States, and even to their amazement on the eighth of February the English Generals set sail from Queenborough with sixty Sail of men of War, to which on the 11 th. of the same moneth twenty sail more joyned from Portsmouth, and with this fleet they sailed over against Portland, where they lay cross the Channel half Seas over to discover the Dutch fleet; on Friday the 18 th. of February by break of day the Southermost ships of the English descried the Dutch, consisting (as their own prints reported) of seventy six men of War, who had the charge of 300 Merchants Ships to convey homewards. 1652.

The English Fleet out at Sea again.

The English Fleet made what sail they could towards the Enemy, and Van Tromp having recollected his ships of War prepared to receive them, and about eight in the morning, the Triumph wherein Blake and Dean were, with twelve ships more (for the rest of the fleet could not get up) engaged board and board with the gross of the Dutch fleet, and the Triumph was hardly put to it, having received seven hundred Cannon-shot in her hull, but was gallantly relieved by Lawson Commander of the Fairfax. By this time the whole English Navy came up, and a furious fight ensued betwixt the two fleets which continued till the night parted them.

The two Fleets engage near Portland. The fifth time.

The Ship wherein General Monk commanded being a slow sayler, could not perform so much as he desired, but she lost many men, and had as great a share in the fight as any of her condition. The Triumph and Fairfax being enclosed by the greatest of the Holland ships, had in each an hundred killed and wounded, and Blake received a hurt in his thigh with a piece of Iron which a shot had driven out, and Ball the Captain thereof was slain, together with Sparrow the Secretary; the Prosperous, a ship of four and forty Guns, was boarded by the Dutch, but recovered by the Merlin Frigot, Captain Mildmay of the Vantguard was killed; the English lost not a ship in this fight, but had many disabled; but six men of War of the Dutch were taken and sunk, whereof one was a Flagg-ship, and it is said, that most of the Officers in Trumps ship were killed or wounded, and many of the Marriners. Such of the English fleet as were disabled got into Portsmouth, and the wounded men were sent on shore, and on Saturday morning the Dutch fleet was again discerned seven Leagues off Weymouth, and over against Dungenness whither the English plied; and in the afternoon both fleets engaged with so much fury that they were quickly environed with flame & smoke. Tromp had put his Merchant men before him, and after the first shock, he drew off and fought retreating towards Bulloign, and in his way thither the English Frigots at large took many of his Merchants ships, and Lawson boarded a Dutch man of War and brought her off; the next day early in the morning the fight was renewed, which continued very fierce till four in the afternoon, but the wind being cross to the English at North North-East, Tromp got to Calice Sands, and there anchored, and thence tided it home.

The Dutch beaten in this fight.

The Dutch lost in these three days fight eleven Men of War, and thirty Merchants ships, and by the calculation of their own Prisoners, they had not less than fifteen hundred men killed; but of the English though many ships were shattered, there was but one sunk named the Sampson, but Captain Button the Commander thereof (though much wounded) and most of the men were saved. The number of the English slain is not reported, but by the best conjecture that could be made, they were not much less than those of their enemies.

This

1652. This Year died the Lady Eleanor Davys, whose Prediction concerning the late Duke of Buckingham's death, was thought remarkable enough to be commemorated by several Writers of the History of those times, amongst the Presages that threatned the untimely end of that Great Man: And this coming from a Person of her Quality, was so much the more a subject of critical discourse and censure among the Wits of those times; and whence perhaps, some later Observers have taken aim; but since common Fame in these cases is ever apt to take things upon trust, and for want of due examination, to fix reproach as soon upon the best as the worst, it may much conduce to the rectifying of mis-informed judgments, & the vindicating of the memory of so Vertuous a Lady from the injurious reflexions of unwary Writers, to give this faithful account of her; She was the 5*th.* Daughter of the Lord George Audley Earl of Castlehaven, and was married to Sir John Davys the Kings first Serjeant at Law in England, and sometime Attorney General in Ireland (whose Worth his own Learned Writings, and the known Credit he had with his Prince, sufficiently speak) by whom she was the Mother of one only Daughter, Lucy, married to Ferdinando late Earl of Huntingdon, and (by her) Grandmother to the present Earl; as for her Character, there needs little more to be said (since nothing can be more advantageously) than to repeat what hath been delivered of her by the Elegant Pen of the Learned Doctor Peter Du Moulin; She was, saith he, Erudita supra sexum, Mitis infra Sortem; Learned above her Sex, Humble below her Fortune, having a Mind so Great and Noble, that Prosperity could not make it remiss, nor her deepest adversity cause to shrink or discover the least pusillanimity or dejection of Spirit; for being full of the love of God, to that fulness, the smiling World could not adde, nor the frowning from it detract. Hence, as from a living Spring, flowed a full stream of Christian Graces, redounding to the benefit of many as well as to her own Comfort. She had a fineness of Wit, but so temper'd with Prudence & Consultation, that she early addicted her self to serious speculation, and the study of Divine Truths: Wherefore, since our Saviour bids us examine (especially in these cases) the tree by the fruit, we recommend it to the consideration of the judicious, whether a Person so qualified and so addicted, might not with most equity be judged on this occasion, to have been favoured with some beam of a divine knowledge of future things; Certain it is, that not only in the above-mentioned, but in divers other Events both of private and publick Concernment, her Predictions proved undoubtedly true; In the most flourishing condition of the Nation, she foretold its unparallell'd troubles, and in the depth of those troubles, she foretold that happy Restauration to Peace and Settlement which we at this day (through the Mercy of God) enjoy under our Most Gracious Sovereign, and in every one she long before prefix'd the time of their accomplishment.

This busie year ended with the safe arrival of Prince Rupert with the Swallow, and a prize laden with Tobacco, and a little Frigot at Nantes in Britanny, from the Caribee Islands. He had been sometime in those Seas with seven or eight ships and his Brother Prince Maurice with him, endeavouring to give what annoyance he could to the Enemies of the Crown of England in those parts, till some serviceable occasion might render him more favourable elsewhere; but the sad strokes of adverse Fortune, which yet eclipsed the Royal Throne of England did even in those distant parts pursue this Illustrious pair of Princes, and by the violence of a Hurricane, the life of one of them (the Valiant Prince Maurice) was taken away, a person who in our unhappy Civil Wars gave eminent proof of as much courage and generosity as any one man could be master of, than whom death has left few worthier behinde, to dignifie the World with actions of Glory and Renown. Prince Rupert at his first arrival fell sick, but upon his recovery he was invited to Paris and complemented by the King of France, and cordially welcom'd by the King our Sovereign, where now almost the whole Royal Family were met together.

Prince Maurice drown'd in the West Indies.

1653. It is commonly observed, that it is easier much to obtain a Conquest than secure it; and in nothing was this more visible than in the present posture of Affairs in England, where the new Commonwealth now advanced to as great prosperity and security as their ambitious hopes could aim at, having together with the death of the late King, as much as in them lay even buried and eradicated Monarchy it self, began to sink under its own weight, and by intestine divisions at home, to meet that ruine, which all the strength and power of her enemies abroad and their Confederates could not reach to.

The Officers of the Army who effected this change, had met in Counsel some moneths before in meditation of altering the Government, and these being of two parties and of different interests, it was scarce believed they could agree in the design. Harrison who was one of the heads of that party at this time known by the name of the Sect of the Fifth Monarchy, had gained a great part of the Inferior Officers, and these were so much intoxicated with that Notion, that they never could approve of any Government, but where (as they said) Christ was to Rule, which as they explained, (was a Dominion to be exercised by Saints under him, men of such holy and sanctified lives, that nothing but plenty and happiness could be expected from their Government, and to such, all Offices of Trust and Power, Military and Civil were to be committed, and of this sort they resolved to chuse by nomination a new Representative. Cromwe mingled with these zealots in this projection, knowing the inconsistencie of their intentions, and that the reins of Power would be by them managed (as the Poets feigned Phaetons conduct of the Chariot of the Sun) to set the world in a flame, and introduce such confusion as would necessitate his taking to himself the Government to rescue his party from destruction.

The

1653. The Parliament were very ſenſible of theſe actings, but knew not how to prevent their progreſs, yet that they might not be wanting to their own ſecurity, they had many conferences with theſe Officers, wherein they repreſented to them the inconveniences of their proceedings, telling them as the temper of the Nation now ſtood, no ſafety could be adminiſtred to the Government, but by filling up the Houſe with Elections by the Countrey, of perſons qualified, and when they were by that method arrived to a full Repreſentative of the Nation, their Acts would be received with greater Authority, and by the concurrent advice of ſo great a Body of intereſſed perſons, their cauſe would be ſtrengthned, and the good they would do in reforming the Law and all abuſes, and adminiſtring Juſtice impartially, and ſettling a due liberty to the people in Civil and Spiritual things, would make the Government in a few years ſo acceptable, that there would be no need of an Army to ſupport it.

To this anſwer was made by the Officers, That they could not expect any good fruits to the people of God from this Parliament, wherein there was ſo great a party of Carnal men of corrupt Principles, that the perſons by their Authority to be choſen would be of the like temper and ſpirit as they are, and joyn with them in perpetuating themſelves in the Supreme Government; concluding, That the people of the Land, who were diſtinguiſhable from the people of God were not yet to be truſted with the choice of their own Repreſentatives: But they (they ſaid) would take care to devolve the Supreme Authority upon known perſons, fearing God, and of approved integrity. This reaſoning on both ſides tended to make the breach wider, but the Parliament in the mean time went on according to their own purpoſe, and prepared an Act for the ſetling of Qualifications of Members to fill up their Houſe, wherein ſuch ſpeed was made, that on the 20 th. of April the Queſtion was ready to be put to paſs it into a Law, when Cromwel, Lambert, Harriſon, and ſome eight Officers more of the Army, by intelligence with ſome of the Members, entred the Houſe, and after a ſhort Speech ſpoken by Cromwel, ſhewing ſome reaſons for the neceſſity of their diſſolution, he declared them diſſolved, and required them to depart, but the Speaker would not leave the Chair, till by Harriſon taken out by the Arm, and Cromwel commanded the Mace to be taken away, and not any more to be carried before him, and then they cauſed the Doors of the Parliament Houſe to be locked, and placed a good Guard thereon to prevent the aſſembling of the Members.

The manner of Cromwels diſſolving the Parliament.

This Revolution could not but be very pleaſing to the King, for now the Stone was rowling, in all probability it would not fix (as in the ſequel it appeared) till that juſt Government ſhould be attained under which this Kingdom had enjoyed as much happineſs for many Centuries of years as any Nation in the world.

The firſt thing done by theſe Officers after this change, was to conſtitute a Councel of State conſiſting of the Chief Officers of the Army, and ſuch of the late Parliament as were their Confederates, in whom the Supreme Authority was placed, and till a Repreſentative ſhould be choſen, all obedience was required thereunto as fully as when the Parliament was ſitting, and all Judges, Sheriffs, Juſtices of Peace, Mayors, Bayliffs, and other Civil Officers and publique Miniſters whatſoever were to proceed in their reſpective Offices and places, and Writs were to run in the ſtyle of the Keepers of the Liberty of England as before. 1653.

A Council of State conſtituted.

The Dutch thought to profit themſelves of this alteration, and made all poſſible haſte to get out their fleet, but our new Governours omitted nothing that might advance their Maritime preparations; and the firſt thing they did after their eſtabliſhment, was to make an Ordinance for the raiſing of ſix moneths Aſſeſſment from the 24 th. of June enſuing, which was readily obeyed, becauſe it exacted not ſo great a ſum, as the laſt Acts of Parliament for Aſſeſſments.

A ſix months tax ſetled.

Whilſt theſe things were in action, all Officers and Souldiers in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and all the Officers in the Fleet were practiſed on to approve of the Armies proceedings, and did comply therewith, ſo that no Commotion followed in any part upon this mutation of Government.

The next conſiderable matter that occurr'd was a Naval Combat betwixt the Dutch fleet under Trump aſſiſted with De Ruyter, Wit Wittens, and the two Everſons conſiſting of 104 Men of War and 12 Galliots and 9 Fire-ſhips, and the Engliſh Fleet under the Command of General Monk and General Dean (who were both in one Ship) aſſiſted by Pen the Vice-Admiral, and Lawſon Rear-Admiral, conſiſting of an hundred ſhips of all ſorts. It was about eleven of the clock at noon on the ſecond of June that both the fleets engaged, and ſo fatal was the beginning of the fight, that at the firſt Broad-ſide of the Enemy, Dean was ſhot almoſt off in the middle by a Cannon-Bullet, as he ſtood by General Monk, but he without any diſturbance was ſo preſent to himſelf, that he cauſed him to be removed, and proſecuted the Battel with great reſolution, without any further notice of the accident. The noiſe and thunder of the Cannon was very great, & had been very deplorable to both parties, if a ſudden calm had not abated the fury of the fight for ſome time after it began; but after two hours ſuch a freſh gale of wind roſe, that the fight was renewed in ſo violent a manner, that it continued with very little intermiſſion whilſt there was any light; Lawſon preſſed ſo hard upon De Ruyter with his Squadron that he had carried him if Trump had not come in to his relief, but he could not prevent Lawſons ſinking a ſhip of Holme of two and forty Guns that had in her a hundred and forty men; the General with his Squadron was in the thickeſt of them, and greater execution had been done, but that the wind blew croſs to the Engliſh, and ſo favoured their enemies, that they bore away before it. The next morning early General Monk found himſelf near them, but the wind was ſo ſlack, he could not come up till noon to engage their fleet, but then the Combat was begun with greater vigour than at any time before, and continued till ten at night; ninety of Trumps fleet in the heat of the engagement were in ſo great confuſion, and ſo unwilling to ſtand to the fight, that he fired upon them, and ſent his boat to Command them to come up to him, but nothing he could 1653. could do or say, could perswade more than twenty of them to return, the rest steered away East and by South, but the wind being fresh Westwardly, the General press'd so hard upon them, that he sunk six of their best Ships, and two were blown up amongst their own Fleet, and eleven Ships and two Hoyes were taken, and thirteen hundred and fifty Prisoners, whereof six were Captains of very good note, and of the Ships one was a Vice-Admiral, and two were Rear-Admirals.

Trump defeated.

At the end of this daies Fight, General Blake came in with eighteen fresh Ships, and if the Dutch had not been upon the Flats of Dunkirk and Calice, whereby our great Ships could not get up to them, most of their Fleet had been ruin'd or taken. The English had not one Ship lost or disabled, and except General Dean, but one Captain slain.

Van Trump imputed this overthrow to the ignorance and unskilfulness of his Captains, but his Masters were so humbled by it, that a resolution for Peace was immediately taken up, and a Vessel with a white Flag, and a Messenger to prepare a way for two Embassadors, was sent into England.

The Councel of Officers had now agreed upon the several persons all over England (who were the most sanctified creatures they could nominate) to form a representative, and a summons was sent to every one of them in the name of Oliver Cromwell Captain General of all the Forces, &c. to take upon them the trust to which they were summoned, and to meet at White-Hall to that purpose on the 5*th.* of July then next coming.

The new Parliament summoned.

These according to the respective summons assembled at the time appointed, and went to Westminster to the Parliament House; and chose one Rouse a Cornish man (made by the late Parliament Provost of Eaton) to be their Speaker, and appointed several Committees in the manner as other Parliaments used to do, to make their business easie to them.

The Dutch in this conjuncture had underhand made Overtures of a Peace to Cromwell, which were not ill received, but that they might make it on better terms, they were resolved once more to try their fortunes at Sea, to regain their lost reputation; and in order thereunto, they prepared a Fleet to the number of 125 Sail, with so much confidence of success, that they posted Van Trump out with 95 Ships before the rest were ready, which were to be brought to him by Witt Wittens from the Texell.

It was upon the 29*th.* of July in the morning when the English Fleet of about 106 Ships descried the Dutch, they had time to draw together, and divided their Fleet into 4 Squadrons, (viz.) the first under Trump, the second under Vice-Admiral Everson, and the third under Rere-Admiral Floris, and the fourth under Witt Wittens for a reserve.

The English Fleet was commanded by General Monk in Chief, having Pen for his Vice-Admiral, and Lawson Rear-Admiral; Blake was discomposed in his health, and not with the Fleet, the English were all a stern, and could not get up till six of the clock to come to any engagement, and then it was begun with a few of the nimblest Frigots, which were afterwards re-inforc'd to the number of thirty, who continued the Battail till the night parted them, though the rest of the Fleet could not get up to joyn with them. 1653.

The last Dutch Engagement between G. Monk and Trump, being the sixth Combat.

The Dutch by the darkness of the night sent away many of their maim'd disabled Ships, and got by the English Fleet to joyn with the 25 Ships that Wittens brought to them, which much encouraged the rest to renew the Fight, in hopes to be reveng'd of their late affront; and now both Fleets met in the most fierce and cruel Fight that ever was fought, (General Monk observing this War to be very burdensome to the Nation, thought the best way of ending it to be in the sharpness of it, and therefore gave orders to all his Captains, neither to give nor take Quarter; for he had found by experience, that the taking of Ships Oblig'd him always to send other Ships off with them, and so the Fleet became weakned,) The Air was quickly fill'd with scattred Limbs of men blown up; The Sea was died with the Blood that flowed from the Veins of the slain and wounded; Wit Wittens and Everson did bestir themselves, and often attempted to board the Ship in which the General himself was; Cornelius Everſons Ship was sunk, and he taken, and the famous Van Trump himself standing upon the Poop of his Ship with his drawn sword encouraging his men, was slain with a Musquet-bullet; whereby the rest of the Fleet was so discouraged, that they hoysted out all the Sail they could to haste away towards the Texell: The English pursued little, (having bought the Victory at a dear rate) but tack'd about to Sole-bay, there to repair the shattered Ships, and dispose of their Prisoners, whereof five were Captains, viz. Everson, Zanger, Fomeen, Scotten and D'Hayes, and about 1200 common men, by the mercy and compassion of the English taken out of Boats, and swimming in the Sea; 33 sail of Ships, out of which they were sav'd, were sunk to the bottom of the Ocean, and in regard that these Prisoners were belonging to so many lost Ships, by this means the number of them was known; but it is supposed some were sunk, out of which no men were saved. The English lost 400 common men, and eight Captains, Graves, Peacock, Taylor, Crispe, Newman, Cox, Owen, and Chapman, men of great resolution; and had about 700 wounded, whereof five were Commanders, but they lost but one Ship, which was called the Oake. Van Trump was a man of so great Courage and Experience in Maritime affairs, that he justly merited the fame of being the most Renowned Sea-Captain of this Age, and perhaps there were few better at any time before. He was a Person of much Vertue, Honour and Fidelity, and a great lover of his Countrey, which made him bear a grateful respect to the House of Orange, by whom the foundation was laid of that (High and Mighty) greatness they now assume and enjoy; and by whose 1653. Prudence and courage their Liberties were rescued and preserved against one of the most potent Princes of Europe. Out of his great sence of Honor, he had much commiseration for the sufferings of our Royal Family, and did endeavour to perswade his Masters to espouse the Kings Interest, as that to which they were in Justice and Conscience obliged to adhere, and though he was without success in that undertaking, he omitted not on all occasions to testifie his affection to his Majesty.

Character of Van Trump

The War was not only prosecuted in those great fights, but in all parts of the world where the trade of the two Nations was used, the ships of each engaged one the other, and many sore conflicts were made in several places, but because the particular description of these encounters would swell this Treatise to too large a bulk, we do omit the doing thereof.

This new Parliament (for so, for distinction we must call it) began to be so troublesome in their consultations, that the whole Nation, and the most of those Army Officers that named them, grew wearier of them than those that were before removed; for they were so Seraphical and Notional in their debates, that the whole Magistracie and Ministry was to be so modelled, as would make the Government ridiculous; but the Ministry and the maintenance thereof by Tythes was that they most arraigned as an Antichristian Constitution; so that now all things succeeded to Cromwels expectation, and their dissolution was earnestly pressed to save a threatned confusion in Government, if they continued in Authority; and of this some amongst themselves were so sensible, that Rous the Speaker on the 12 th. of December acquainted the House, that their sitting was no longer necessary, and being seconded by some others privy to the intention, he rose from the Chair, and went out of the House with the Mace before him, and with as many as would follow him (being the Major part of the Members) he came to Whitehal, and there resigned to Cromwel the Instrument by him formerly delivered to them at their first sitting; Harrison and some few staid in the House after the rest went, but were quickly dispersed by a party of Souldiers sent to dissolve them.

The new Parliament dissolved.

About four days after, the Officers of the Army had prepared an Instrument or Systeme of Government, on which the foundation of a new Dominion was to be erected, and they entreated Oliver Cromwel to accept of the Government under the Title of Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland: He at first seemingly refused the Dignity; but when the exigence of time and necessity of Affairs were laid open to him, he did accept of it; and was that day at one in the afternoon installed at Westminster in manner following:

The Protector installed.

He came from White-Hall to the Chancery Court in Westminster-Hall attended by the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, the Barons of the Exchequer and Judges in their Robes, and after them the Counsel learned of the Commonwealth, and the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Recorder of London in their Scarlet Gowns, then came the Protector attended with many of the chief Officers of the Army; there was a Chair of State set in the Court, and the Protector stood by it, till the Instrument of Government was read, then the Oath was administred to him, which he took in the following words: 1653.

I promise in the presence of God, not to violate or infringe the matters and things contained in the Instrument, but to observe and cause the same to be observed; and in all things to the best of my understanding, Govern the Nation, according to the Laws, Statutes, and Customs thereof; and to seek their peace, and cause Justice and Law to be equally administred.

Having subscribed this Oath and the Instrustrument, he sate in the Chair of State, and put on his Hat, and the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, delivered up the Seal to him, and the Lord Mayor his Sword and Cap of Maintenance, all which he respectively returned to them again; and then the Protector in the same manner as he came returned to White-hall. To publish the Instrument of Government is not very necessary, and will be too long, but some heads thereof are here inserted:

The heads of the Instrument of the Protectors Government.

2. The first to assemble on the third of September 1654.

3. No Parliament to be dissolved till it have sate 5 moneths.

The

1653. The first Act of these Counsellors after their establishment was a Proclamation notifying the Government with a direction therein, That all Judges, Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, Mayors, Bayliffs, and all other publique Officers, and Ministers whatsoever within this Commonwealth or any part thereof, do proceed in their respective places and offices till further Order to the contrary.

The States of the United Provinces were brought into so low condition by the two last fights, and their people so much dispirited, that a general Revolt was feared in the Provinces, nevertheless they put as good a Countenance as they could on their condition, and chose the Heer Opdam to be Admiral of their Fleet in the place of Trump, but thought it more advisable to prosecute overtures of peace then venture another Battel; and certainly if the War had been continued, their Mariners were so baffled, they would very hardly have procured men to furnish a fleet, and one Battel more might have brought us a Blank paper for our own conditions; but Cromwel was not so well setled in his Throne to hazard any thing, and therefore the Dutch Embassadors, Newport, Youngstal, and Bevering, and Vander Perre were well received by him; and in the beginning of this year they were so diligent in their Negotiation, that on the 5 th. of April the Articles of Peace were signed in London, and on the 26 th. of the same moneth they were proclaimed in London and Amsterdam, and in this Peace the King of Denmark was included.

Opdam supplies the place of Trump.

1654. The Protector concludes a Peace with the Dutch.

For the King of Denmark espousing the interest of the States of Holland, had arrested two and twenty English Ships which were in his Ports, and at their instance confiscated the Merchandizes therein; so that they were obliged to compose that difference, and this was that which had more difficulty than any other matter in the Treaty.

The Articles of the Peace we think not very essential to our History to be inserted at large, but the two which were of most importance, were these (viz.)

The Men of War and other Ships of Holland meeting the English ships in the Narrow Seas shall lower their sayls to them.

The States shall cause restitution to be made by the King of Denmark of all the ships and goods of the English by him seized which are yet undisposed, and a full compensation in value for such of them as had been sold, to be ascertained in a time prefixt by six English Merchants, and six Dutch who should meet for that purpose.

And the Spanish Embassador was as early as any to congratulate the Protectors Authority; and peace was made with the Queen of Sweden, and the Conde del Sa Lord Chamberlain of the Kingdom of Portugal came in a splendid embassie to sue for a Peace of him: nor were the French backward to own his power, having given to Monsieur Bourdeaux their Resident here the Quality of Embassador to qualifie him the better for his Negotiation, and added to him the Baron of Baas for a Colleague, Cromwel being now owned by many of the Neighbour Princes and States abroad, and by most of those of his own party at home, thought himself insecure from none but the Royallists, and to give them some terrour, he had by his Agents formed a Plot to draw in some honest credulous persons of that party to their destruction; and in prosecution hereof in the month of May Colonel John Gerard, and his Brother Master Charles Gerard, Mr. Philip Porter, Mr. Peter Vowel, and Mr. Sumerset Fox were apprehended for a pretended intention to assassinate the Protector, and brought before a High Court of Justice erected for that purpose, proclaimed on the 13 th. of June following, and sitting on the 31 th. before whom they were tried for their lives, and three of them (viz.) Colonel John Gerard, Mr. Vowel, and Sumerset Fox were condemned. The last of these was reprieved and pardoned upon his confession of the fact and craving mercy, but the other two were executed. Mr. Vowel was hanged at Charing Cross, where with an undaunted spirit tempered with a Christian constancie and patience he gave up his life. Colonel Gerard was beheaded on Tower-hill, and died with great courage and Magnanimity. With him upon the same Scaffold suffered the Portugall Embassadors Brother Don Pantalion Sa, who had a while before made a riot in the new Exchange upon conceit of some affront offered there to him, and killed one Greenway a Gentleman standing quietly at a shop, no opposition being made but by this Colonel Gerard, who was fatally joyned with him in death. The Murder was committed by a Knight of Malta, who escaped, but this Gentleman and four more of the Embassadors Servants being taken (one whereof was an Irish youth.) They were arraigned in Westminster-Hall before Judge Rolles, and others by special Commission of Oyer and Terminer thereunto appointed; and the Portuguese were tried by a Jury of half English and half strangers, and the Irish Boy by a Jury of English; they were all found guilty, but none suffered but the above mentioned Don Pantaleon and the Irish youth, who was hanged at Tyburn.

Our King had remained in the Court of France between two and three years, with an expectation sometimes flowing, and sometimes ebbing, of gaining at length some opportunity to recover his Kingdoms; some hopes he had of assistance from several other Princes of the Empire, as the Dukes of Brandenburgh, Lunenburgh, Brunswick, &c. as also the Emperour himself, to whom was sent in a decent and Honourable equipage the Lord Wilmot created Earl of Rochester, and his Address received with much civility and respect. Moreover, the Dutch seemed very inclinable to the owning and adopting his Interest in their War with England, and Prince Rupert was designed to have had the Command in his Majesties Name, of a Squadron of their Ships; yet so little speed was made in putting this Overture into act, and so suddenly was the Peace made up between this Nation and them, that whatever they hoped for and expected from them, quickly vanisht and came to nothing: His next and more probable expectation was from the Success of those earnest endeavours that were made by the Pope and other Princes, for a Reconciliation between the two Crowns of France and Spain, in which Affair he also interposed himself a most zealous Sollicitor, as not doubting but that from the united forces of two such powerful Monarchs, he should receive considerable assistance: and matters were once in a fair way to a peaceful conclusion, had not the Politick Reasons of State, as it was thought, of Cardinal Mazarini put a stop to this Grand work; so that taking his leave of the King of France (and the other Great ones) from whom he received many Complements and Apologies, he went accompanied with his Brother the Duke of York, his Cosins Prince Rupert and Prince Edward Palatine, to Chatillon, a House belonging to the Prince of Conde, where they staid a while to determine how most commodiously each of them should dispose of themselves: The King with Prince Rupert resolved for Germany (the Earl of Rochester being at that time with the Emperour at Regensburgh, to sollicite in his behalf;) and the rather, because about that time a general Diet of the Estates of the Empire was to be held in that City: Prince Edward took his journey to Bourbon, and the Duke of York remained in France till a good while after the conclusion of the Peace with England, being Lieutenant General of the French Kings Army, Commanded in Chief by Marshal Turein. Prince Rupert parted from the King to go to Heidelbergh, the Chief Seat of his Brother Charles Prince Palatine, and thence to the Imperial Court at Vienna, and the King took his Journey by the way of Cambray and Liege to the Spaw, which he made his first place of Residence in Germany: Here his Sister the Princess Royal of Aurange met him, and after a few moneths stay in this place, accompanied him to Colen, where they were received with great Honour and Magnificence; as they made their entrance into the Town, the great and small Guns were discharged, and the Deputies of the City came in a solemn manner to Complement them: the Duke of Newburgh also entertained them very splendidly at his House at Dusseldorp, from whence the Princess of Aurange returning into Holland, the King her Brother brought her onward of her way as far as Bedinguen.

The King removes to the Spaw. Thence to Colen.

From the time we left Ireland in so declining a condition, and so almost lost to his Majesties hopes, and the Lord Lieutenants endeavours, the most considerable Force that was left, was in Ulster, under the leading of Emir Mac Mahon Bishop of Clogher, who (Owen Roe Oneal being dead) succeeded him as General in those Parts, besides the united forces of Clanrickard, Muskerry, and Castlehaven, and some few parties that now and then sallied from their Fastnesses, these for a while gave check to the Republicans and Crommels substitutes; till in the end the said Prelate being overthrown (even to the taking of his person mortally wounded in the fight) by Sir Charles Coot, and Colonel Fenwick; the Lord Muskerry by the Lord Brogbil; the Marquess of Clanrickard, soon after a defeat he received at Finagh, forced to lay down his Arms in the Isle of Carrick; the remnant of the Ulster forces Commanded by the Lord Jinkillen, Colonel O-Rely, and the Mac-Mahons, Relations of the foresaid Bishop, yeelding upon Articles; as likewise did Morrogh O Brian, having all of them stood it out to the last extremity: the remaining Towns, Castles, and Forts which held out, as Athlone, Galloway, Ballishannon, Ballimote, the Isles of Arran and Enisbuffen, and other places, were all constrained to surrender themselves to the Conquerours power; the Marquess of Ormond, and the Lord Inchequin, having in time provided for their safeties, (when they saw things in a desperate condition, and still growing worse and worse) by imbarking for France, nothing was left but to dispossess and extirpate the vanquisht, and take possession in their room: Some they removed out of the world by an Itinerant High-Court of Justice, which went in Circuit from one place to another, the President whereof was one Justice Donellan an Irish-man, and Cook (notorious by his officiating in another High-Court) his assistant: Others were sent out of the Land by the Articles of Transportation, which the Marquess of Clanrickard and others upon their laying down Arms had concluded with them; namely, to have free Liberty to go beyond Sea to serve the King of Spain, or some Forein Prince in his Wars: those Inheritors that remained and escaped the High-Court, were transplanted to the Province of Connaught, so that there was a large extent of Territory left for the Adventurers and Purchasers of Irish Lands: the main pretence of this foresaid Court which sate at Kilkenny, and thence removed to Waterford, Dublin, Ulster, and other places, was for the Trial of those that were judged guilty of the Irish Rebellion in 1641. The chief of Quality that suffered, (for there were a number of less note) were Colonel Mac Hugh, Colonel Tool, and Colonel Walter Bagnal, and who was of all the most eminent as in Quality so in Crime (had he been judged by a Lawful Authority) as having been one of the principal leading Men in that Insurrection, and likewise one of the chief obstructors of the Union, endeavoured by the Lord Lieutenant to the advantage of his Majesties Service, Sir Philim Oneal, who being taken near Charlemount, tried, and condemned, was hanged and Quartered near my L. Canfields House, at the place where he had caused his father to be murdered: thus was Ireland become subjugated to the English Usurpation. And so likewise was Scotland thought to have been at this time, when on the sudden a new Hostility springs up in the Highlands, headed by divers of the Scotch Nobility, who had the most powerful influence in those parts, the Earls of Glencarn, Athol, Seaforth, Kinoule, the Lord Kenmore, the Lairds Mac-Renalds, and Mac-Cloud, Colonel Montgomery, Sir Mungo Murry, and Sir Arthur Forbes; these having each of them got together their several parties, were endeavouring to unite into a Body, and so trusted to have been able with a force not altogether contemptible to have taken the field against the main power of the English that were then in Scotland: and 'tis like enough they had speedily effected what they intended, had not the chief Body of them, amounting in all to about 4000 under Glencarn, and Kenmore been encountred on the sudden, ill armed, ill provided, and in disorder, by Colonel Morgan at Cromar; Glencarn's Army in this conflict, being very much put Glencarn & Middleton defeated in the Highlands.

1654. put to the rout and disperſed, and himſelf miſſing but little of being taken, the reſt in little ſtragling parties were many times met with to their loſs: yet were they not for all this ſo out of heart, but that they again made a ſhift in ſome ſort to reimbody, & that ſo much themore confidently, upon expectation of Middletons coming over with Supplies out of Holland; though upon his arrival not long after with Commiſſion to be General, Sir G. Monro, (who together with the Lord Napier, and Major General Dalyel, landed with Middleton at Ulney Ferry) having alſo Commiſſion to be Lieutenant General; The Highland Levies in ſtead of being re-inforced by theſe additional forces and ſupplies were rather weakned and overthrown by the animoſities of ſome of the Scotch Nobility, eſpecially Glencarn ſtomaching the preference of Middleton and Monro to the Command of the Army above him, thereupon departed in diſcontent, and laid down his Arms. Upon the neck of which breaches and defections among them. General Monk (the Dutch War being ended, having no more Work to do at Sea) is ſent Commander in Chief into Scotland, and coming upon Middleton at Loughgery, on the twentieth of July gave him an utter defeat, and thereby put a period to theſe Highland Agitations, and all further attempts in Scotland, to the diſturbance of the then regnant Authority in England.

The General Aſſembly diſſolved by Col. Morgan

The Kirk of Scotland alſo her ſelf at this time had the wings of her Religious Empire very much clipp'd, if not quite taken away by the diſſolution of her General Aſſembly, which was done by Colonel Morgan, the fore-going year at Aberdeen, where they were aſſembled, Mr. Andrew Cant & the reſt of them in vain proteſting againſt the action: the like diſturbance they had afterwards at Edenburgh from Lieutenant Colonel Cottrel.

The Marqueſs of Argyle intercedes for the Liberty of the Church of Scotland.

The Marqueſs of Argyle to keep up his Reputation with the Church of Scotland, ſeemed much troubled in his mind at this proceeding againſt the Aſſemblies, and interceded with the Protector for the liberty of the Church, wherein he had very good ſucceſs: For Oliver conſidering that his declining the Kings intereſt, facilitated the total ſubjection of Scotland to his Authority, was willing enough to oblige him, by ſeeming to do that at his requeſt, he determined to do before for the quieting of the minds of the people; the Church of Scotland was therefore indulged with the exerciſe of Religion, and a great part of their Juriſdiction and Diſcipline: they were reſtrained in little more than the power of keeping general Aſſemblies (their Presbyteries being permitted to convene) and the rigour of Excommunication: For, whereas before perſons excommunicated were not excluded from the Communion of the Kirk, but had all their eſtates confiſcated till their Reconciliation, This later part was not now to be executed; but to pleaſe the Miniſters for the reſtraint of their power, the maintenance of Scholars in Univerſities of Scotland was increaſed, and many Priviledges granted to them.

The Priviledges of the Univerſity in Scotland, increaſed, and maintained for the Scholars

The Government and ſecurity of the Kingdom of Ireland, was the next care of the Protector. Major Gen. Lambert was formerly appointed for that Government, and had provided all his equipage to go thither; but Cromwel was jealous, leſt his ambition ſhould excite him to gain a party there to eſtabliſh himſelf againſt him: and therefore he artificially contrived to hinder him from going, upon pretence of greater advancement here, and he made him next to himſelf, Commander in Chief of all the Armies, with an entertainment of ten pounds a day; this done, he conſtituted his own Son-in-law Fleetwood to be Deputy of Ireland, aſſiſted with 6 Councellors (that is to ſay) Steel who was after made Chancellor, Pepys one of the Barons of the Exchequer in England, appointed to be Lord Chief Juſtice of Ireland, Mr. Robert Goodwin of Suſſex, Miles Corbet, and the Colonels Robert Hammond, and Mathew Thomlinſon. 1654.

Fleetwood is made Deputy of Ireland.

The King was at Colen when he received the diſconſolate News of the diſaſters in Scotland and Ireland, ſupported chiefly by that brave and undaunted fortitude, which never failed him in the greateſt of his adverſity. The Princes of Germany were very kind to him, which made his ſtay in thoſe parts the more agreeable; and to encreaſe his comfort, he ſent the Marqueſs of Ormond to Paris, to wait on his Brother the Duke of Glouceſter to him, whom he more earneſtly deſired to have near him, leſt his youth might be prevailed upon, by the ſubtilty of Arguments, and temptation of Riches and Promotion, to change his Religion; for the King was ever moſt zealous in the profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion in himſelf and Family, and on all occaſions to promote it to his power in others.

The Marq. of Ormond ſent to attend the D. of Glouceſter.

According to the late Inſtrument of Government, wherein it was Articled, That a Parliament ſhould be called every three years, and that the firſt ſhould begin on the third of September 1654. A Parliament was ſummoned by Oliver's Writs, choſen after the wonted manner of Election by the peoples voice, and aſſembled at Weſtminſter at the prefixed time above mentioned, making choice for their Speaker of William Lenthal, Speaker in the Long Parliament: their beginning was ſomewhat bold, conſidering the totteringneſs of their Eſtate; for at their very firſt ſitting, they began to queſtion the lawfulneſs of the Power by which they were called, whereupon they were enjoyned to ſign a Recognition of the Government, as it was ſetled in a Single Perſon and a Parliament, before they could be re-admitted to their Seats in the Houſe: this all of them that ſign'd (for ſome refuſed) had liberty again to take their places; but ſo little did their proceedings pleaſe his Protectorſhip, that they had ſcarcely ſate full five moneths (and ſo long they were to ſit by one of the Articles of the Inſtrument) when he came and diſſolved them. A day or two after which, were apprehended Major Wildman, with a Declaration proving the lawfulneſs and neceſſity of taking up Arms againſt Cromwel: and of the Royalliſts, Sir John Packington, Sir Henry Littleton, and ſome others, about a new Conſpiracie, which Oliver told the Members of his Parliament at the time of his diſmiſſing them, he knew to have been countenanced & abetted, if not in a part promoted by ſome of them preſent, whom he

And the truth is, there was a foundation laid (by a Combination of the moſt courageouſly affected toward their Princes Service throughout the Kingdom, authorized by Commiſſion from his Majeſty) of a general riſing for him in every County; which had not ſo quickly and ſo eaſily been ſuppreſt, had not Cromwel, ſparing for no coſt to maintain his Inſtruments of deceit, for he had his Spies ready hired, not only here in all corners, ſuch as counterfeiting themſelves zealous Royalliſts, inſinuated into their Counſels, and betrayed them, (of which number Sir Richard Willis at laſt became ſhrewdly ſuſpected to be one) but even about the Kings perſon, as appeared by the defection of one Manning, preferred in conſideration of his fathers merits (his father was Colonel Manning, ſlain in his late Majeſties Service) to be one of the Kings Secretaries Clerks, whom Colonel Samuel Tuke, forcing open his Chamber-door, took in the very act of holding Correſpondence with Thurloe, Olivers Secretary, from whom having newly received a Pacquet, and ſetting himſelf buſily to the returning of Anſwers, to prevent diſcovery, he was haſtily chewing Papers in his mouth juſt as the Colonel entred. Thus for a long time had he made it his weekly practice to ſend Intelligence to the Uſurper, of all that was tranſacted in the Kings Court, and had a large Penſion punctually aſſigned him for his pains; till at length thus fortunately found out, he had the reward of his treachery paid him in a more deſerved manner, being by the Kings command, the whole Court beſeeching his Majeſty to make a publike example of him, ſhot to death in one of the Duke of Newburghs Caſtles. This Combination, though it were probably to the very bottom diſcovered, before the apprehending of the above-named perſons; yet ſo far the deſign, being generally laid, had taken effect, that in ſeveral Counties ſome ſmall armed parties began to gather into a Body; in Shropſhire and Wales ſome endeavoured to have taken Shrewsbury and Chirk Caſtle by ſurprize, but were both prevented; and of thoſe that attempted Shrewsbury, Sir Thomas Harris, who was the chief, was taken priſoner, and ſent up to London.

Upon Sunday the 11 th. of March, a party for the King of about 200 entred Salisbury about Midnight, and having ſeized upon Horſes, and taken away the Commiſſions of the Judges that were upon their Circuit, bended their courſe towards Cornwal; of which Captain Unton Crook having timely intelligence, purſued them with his own Troop, and at a place called Southmolton in Devonſhire overtook them, and after four hours ſharp Conflict, tired as they were, and drowſie, and faint for want of ſuſtenance, drove them to a neceſſity of yeelding; yet Penruddock bravely ſtood it out, till Articles were granted for the Indemnity of him and his Company, which Crook is ſaid to have afterwards perfidiouſly denied, and left them wholly over to the Courteſie of their Judges: beſides 50 common priſoners, there were taken of the chief Leaders 3 Captains, Penruddock, Jones, and Grove, only Sir Joſeph Waggſtaff made a ſhift to eſcape away. Other Riſings there were in Northumberland, and at the Foreſt of Sherwood in Yorkſhire, where 500 Horſe being met, and not finding the Country to come in as they expected, diſperſt themſelves, and returned to their Habitations. Alſo at Hexam-Moor in Yorkſhire, there was a great Rendezvouze of the Gentry of the Countrey, of whom Sir Henry Slingsby was taken, and Sir Richard Maleverer with much ado eſcaped. 1654.

An Inſurrection at Salisbury.

And the like in other parts of the Nation ſuppreſt.

At Salisbury, Exeter and Chard in Somerſetſhire many of the Weſt Riſers were tried by a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, and executed, and particularlarly at Exeter; Penruddock and Grove were beheaded, Captain Jones was reprieved; beſides thoſe who were put to death of the chief Leaders, many Priſons in the Weſt were filled with a number of the common ſort of priſoners, till within a little while after that they emptied themſelves into Forein Plantations.

Penruddock and Grove beheaded about the Weſtern riſing.

And there hapned about this time an Adventure which ſerved very opportunely for the ridding of Priſons of their ſurcharging numbers, and the imploying of a multitude of looſe and vagrant people, there having been ever ſince the peace with the Dutch, preparations made for the equipping forth of a great and powerful Fleet, upon an Expedition which was kept very ſecret, and not made known even to thoſe that went upon it, unleſs to the Supreme Commanders, till the very laſt; only it was given out, that the Voyage would be very profitable, and to a place where there was much Gold and ſtore of Riches: In this Service we may well think there would not be wanting enough that would greedily engage themſelves; hither all ſorts of people flocked, eſpecially thoſe of low and Bankrupt Fortunes, and upon hopes of enriching themſelves, run headlong moſt of them to their ruine; a Fate that commonly attends precipitate Ambition and Covetouſneſs. This Navy ſetting Sail from Portſmouth on the 27 th. of December put in at the Barbadoes on the 28 th. of January, Venables commanding the Land-Forces, and Pen being General at Sea.

The deatb of Mr. John Selden.

This Year had been ſufficiently memorable, if for nothing elſe, yet for the death of that famous and Learned Antiquary Mr. John Selden, whoſe Works are a Monument far more worthy his Memory, than that in the Inner-Temple Church.

The Marq. of Leda comes Embaſſador from Spain and ſpeedily returns.

The King of Spain was not ignorant that this great preparation was deſigned to make ſome impreſſion on his Dominions in the Weſt-Indies, and after having diſpatched expreſſes into thoſe parts to give them warning thereof, he ſent the Marqueſs of Leda (a perſon of great reputation in Arms) in a ſplendid Embaſſy to the Protector, to divert, or prevent the proſecution of the buſineſs: he arrived at London the 22 th. of May, but had ſo cold reception and was ſo much diſcouraged in his Negotiation, that he quickly returned.

The fleet ſteers towards Hiſpaniola.

In the mean time the Engliſh Fleet ſet ſail from the Barbadoes the 30 th. of March, and ſteered its courſe towards Hiſpaniola, one of the faireſt and richeſt Iſlands belonging to the American Dominions of the King of Spain; ſo that it was by this time apparent enough which way this expedition tended. And whereas it was admired 1654. mired by many, that at that time when no Hostility was declared between this Nation and the Kingdom of Spain, or any defiance bid on either side, we should carry War into his Territories, without any provocation by him first offer'd: it was alledged, That the Conditions of Peace extended not beyond the Line. This, though it serv'd to stop the mouths of some, yet it could not satisfie the Spaniard, who look'd upon it as an absolute breach: However it were, whether this Expedition were just or not; whether it were undertaken to a pious end, as was pretended, to curb the excessive pride, and ambitious usurpation of the Spaniard, and to bring freedome and purity of Religion to those Indians under his Yoke; or, as many are apt to believe, to partake with the Spaniard of some of his Indian Gold, (thinking it too much for one Potentate to ingross so much Treasure to himself,) I shall not undertake to determine. This is most certain, That at the beginning of this Enterprise, it met with a very remarkable Check, (however the War with the Spaniard proved afterwards succesful enough) for General Venables, when as he might have landed his men within a very little of Santo Domingo, (the principal Town and Fortress of the Island, and which was in a manner deserted by the Garrison Souldiers,) upon sight of the English Fleet; nevertheless, led by I know not what Policy and Interest of his own, and (it is more than suspected) over-rul'd by the Counsels of his Wife, set them ashore ten Leagues Westward of Domingo; whereupon the Spaniards gather'd fresh Courage, and betook themselves again to the defence of Santo Domingo which they had abandon'd: The English landing without opposition, and seeing no Enemie near them, thought themselves safe enough, and were in their minds absolute Lords of the Indies, sharing the Golden Mines among them; when contrary to their expectation, the General causing it to be Proclaim'd in the Head of the Army, That none upon pain of death, should plunder any Gold, Plate, or Jewels, or kill any Cattel. This sudden frustration of their Hopes, and the Climates excessive heat, proved the one such a damping to their Spirits, the other such a weakning to their Bodies, that by that time they had marched a most tedious and disconsolate March through thick Woods, in deep scalding Sands, ready to perish with miserable Drought and Thirst for want of Water, (of which they met not with a drop in many miles,) they were brought to such a condition, that they needed not an Enemy to kill them, being already almost dead with faintness and weakness; so that the Spaniards, Negro's, and Molatto's falling upon them, kill'd, with little or no resistance, till they were weary of killing; and those that could make a shift to flye away, found it a sufficient Atchievement for that time, to bring themselves back again safe unto their Ships.

The English land in the Island of Hispaniola.

They are cruelly vanquish'd by the Spaniards and Natives, and driven out of the Island.

In this Conflict Major General Haines acted the part of a very valiant Souldier, who being shamefully deserted by his own men, and overpowred by his Enemies, was slain stoutly fighting: there fell above 600 in the Fight, besides what were cut off in straggling parties neer as many more; & all this Execution was done by not above sixty of the Enemie. The Remnant of this Naval Army, that they might not be thought to have undertaken so long a Voyage, and of such expectation altogether in vain, possest themselves with little or no opposition of another Island called Jamaica; which however not so plentiful and rich a place as that which they at first aimed at, yet with much Industry, and the Supplies that were sent them out of England, they made a shift to make a Habitation of it tolerable enough to abide in, planting themselves at Oristano, the chief if not only Town thereof, and have kept it ever since. 1654.

They possess themselves of Jamaica.

The first Adviser to this Undertaking, was one Gage a Minister (formerly a Romish Priest) who also undertook to be the chief Guide in this Expedition, as one who by his long time of Travel in those parts (of which there is a handsome Relation of his extant) was well acquainted with them; and there he ended his daies not long after his arrival, reaping little fruit of his Project.

Whilst the proceedings in the West-Indies were unprosperous, General Blake had better fortune in the Streights, who coming with his Fleet before Tunis, and sending to the Governour thereof to demand satisfaction for the depredations committed by his people on the English, and to require the English Captives to be delivered to him, had a contemptuous answer return'd, (viz.) Here are our Castles of Guletto and Porta Ferina well mann'd and furnish'd with Ordnance, do what you can, we fear you not; and at the same time they mann'd a line all along the shore, and planted Guns thereon: Whereupon (after a short consultation with his Officers) Blake with his great Ships and their seconds, came into the Bay of Porta Ferina within Musquet-shot of the Castle and their line, and fired with such fury upon them (notwithstanding the frequent discharges of sixty great Guns upon his Ships, that in two hours, the Castle was made defenceless, and all their Guns dismounted, and the stones clattered about their ears; and finding nine of their Ships in the road, he caused them all to be fired with his long Boats, and in five hours they were consumed. After this brisk action he sailed to Algiers and Tripoly, with both which places he made very advantageous treats, and then came again to Tunis which he found (by this time) willing to submit to what he proposed.

Notwithstanding the ill success of the several late endeavours for the King for which so many suffered, it was not much above a Moneth e're the Earl of Lindsey, the Lords Willoughby of Parham, Newport, Maynard, Faulkland, Lucas, Petre, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Sir Jeoffrey Palmer, Sir Richard Wingfield, with divers others, were committed to the Tower, upon suspition of pretended High-Treason against Cromwell; which yet, went no further than bare suspition, for they were never brought to a publick Tryal.

The Duke of Glouceſter willingly obeying the Order of the King his Brother, was come away with the Marqueſs of Ormond from Paris, and having ſtayed for ſome time with his Siſter the Princeſs Royal, at the Hague, was at laſt accompanied by her to the King their Brother at Colen, where ſhe her ſelf alſo ſtaid with them till after the Fair at Frankeford; to which place, they all of them together made a Progreſs of State and Pleaſure, attended by the Marqueſs of Ormond, the Earl of Norwich, the Lord Newburgh, the Lady Stanhop, and Monſieur Hemſlee: her Husband, they went by Coach a little beyond Bonne the Arch-Biſhops Electoral Seat: the reſt of the Journey they went by Water; through every Princes Countrey which they paſt, they had the chief Officers of State ſent to Complement them, and were ſaluted by the great Guns from all their Towns and Caſtles, more eſpecially the Prince Elector of Mentz ſent his grand Marſhal to invite them to his Court: whereupon the Lord Newburgh was ſent back with the Grand Marſhal, to deſire the Elector to excuſe them at preſent, promiſing to wait upon him at their return: Being arrived at Frankeford, and hearing that Queen Chriſtina of Sweden was coming that way in her Journey into Italy, the King ſent one of his Lords to her, expreſſing his deſire to wait upon her, at whatever place her Majeſty ſhould be pleaſed to nominate; the place then appointed for this Interview was Coningſtein, a Village neer Franckford, in the Electorate of Mentz, where he had firſt particular Diſcourſe with her himſelf for half an hour, which paſt with many Complements and Ceremonies of Civility: next the Duke of Glouceſter was admitted, and then the Lords that attended the King. As theſe Princes came back from Franckford, the Elector of Mentz renewing his Civilities, provided all manner of accommodation for them, as they paſſed through his Territories; and meeting them himſelf a great part of the way, he brought them to one of his Palaces, where he entertained them in a very ſumptuous and ſplendid manner, for the ſpace of two or three daies; after which they returned to Colen: Four Burgomaſters being appointed by the Magiſtrate of the City to wait upon them, and welcome them home.

A debate held at White-hall about the admission of the Jews.

Upon the the tendring of certain Propoſals to the Protector by Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael, a Jewiſh Merchant, in the behalf of his Hebrew Nation, for their free admiſſion to Trade, and exerciſe their Religion in England; a Conference was held about it ſeveral days at White-Hall, by the Members of the Councel, and certain Divines of the moſt eminent then in eſteem: and many Arguments being urged, ſome for, others againſt their admiſſion; thoſe againſt it ſo far prevailed, that the Propoſals took no effect.

An Imbargo upon the Goods of Engliſh Merchants in Spain. Open War with England proclaimed by the Spaniard at Dunkirk.

The Spaniſh King thinking it in vain to hope for a Conſervation of the League on this ſide the Line from thoſe whom he judged to have ſo apparently broke it on the other ſide, by invading his Iſland of Hiſpaniola, began not obſcurely to make preparations for War; and to ſhew that he had entertained thoughts of Hoſtility, a general Imbargo was made in Spain of all Engliſh Merchants Goods, and many of their perſons ſecured; hereupon the like was done in England, and there ſuddenly followed on both ſides a denunciation of open War, which by the Spaniard was not long after ſolemnly proclaimed at Dunkirk.

Articles of Peace between England and France ratified and proclaimed.

The diſſolution of the Peace with Spain, was the product of a peace with France; for there having been long ſince an addreſs made to that end from France to the State of England, no ſooner did the breach begin between England and Spain, but the French King ſends to Monſieur Bourdeaux his Ambaſſador here to preſs his Embaſſie; which he did with ſo good ſucceſs, that in a ſhort while after the Articles of Peace between us and France were concluded, ratified by both Parties, and on the twenty eighth of November the Peace was proclaimed at London, and at Paris much about the ſame time.

Whereupon ſoon after Cromwel not to be behind-hand in State, and to provide for the diligent management of all matters concluded in this Treaty, ſends over in the Quality of his Embaſſador extraordinary to the French King, Colonel Lockhart, ſometime one of the Itinerant Judges in Scotland, and now advanced to this Dignity by the Marriage of a Niece of his pretended Highneſs: And at the ſame time there was a ſtrict League of Amity between him and Carolus Guſtavus the then King of Sweden, and Embaſſies of friendly Correſpondence were on each ſide interchanged; from hence went Mr. Rolt, one of Oliver's Bed-Chamber (as Envoy) and from thence arrived here the Lord Chriſtian Bond, who was entertained with more than ordinary reſpect; for of all Amities that were between Cromwel and Forein Princes and States, his moſt particular and intimate ſeems to have been with the Swediſh King, whom a while after he under-hand aided with men in his War againſt the Dane, while at the ſame time he made ſhew of endeavouring an accommodation between thoſe two Kings.

One principal Condition of the Treaty with France, was the excluſion of the King and all his Relations and Adherents out of the King of France his Dominions, but he upon foreſight of what this Treaty would come to, had long ſince betaken himſelf to Germany, and there remained (for the moſt part at Colen, as hath been already mentioned) until ſuch time as the Spaniard invited him into Flanders: his Brother the Duke of York, notwithſtanding the great Command he had in the King of France his Army (the neareſt Ties and Relations little avail, when Self-Intereſt comes in place) was by the ſame reaſon of State, adverti ſed to depart that Kingdom with all his retinue by a prefixed time, not without ſome Complements and Apologies for this diſmiſſion: alſo his departure was reſpited for ſome ſpace, in which he was viſited, and honourably treated by the Marſhal Turein, and others of the French Grandees; as likewiſe by the Duke of Modena (who at that time was come into France about ſome important affairs;) at length he took his leave of the King and Court of France, and attended by the Lord St. Albans, and other Engliſh Lords, took his Journey toward Flanders, where at that time the King his Brother reſided at the invitation of Don John of Auſtria, who then Governour of the Low-Countries for the King of Spain, ſent the Count of Fuenſaldagne, to offer him in the Name of the Spaniſh King all poſſible Service and aſſiſtance.

Yet were his Coffers not ſo well furniſht as he deſired. And therefore notwithſtanding his no ſucceſs in his laſt Parliament, he finds a neceſſity of calling one again, whereupon he ſends forth Writs in July for the ſummoning of another Parliament on the ſeventeenth of September.

A Parliament ſummoned again.

In the mean while, a part of the Engliſh Navy, namely, the Rear-Admiral and ſix other Ships under Captain Richard Stainer, ſet upon a Fleet of eight Spaniards, within four Leagues of the Bay of Cadiz; the Admiral Ship in which was General Don Marco del Porto, with ſix hundred thouſand pieces of Eight, run aſhore in the Bay, the Vice-Admiral a Gallion, Commanded by Don Franciſco de Eſquevell, and having in her 1200000 pieces of Eight, and another Ship Commanded by Don Rodrigues Calderon were taken, and afterwards fired (one wilfully by the Spaniards in it, the other by accident:) Two others were taken and kept in poſſeſſion, the Rear-Admiral a Gallion, Commanded by Don Franciſco del Hayo, and having in her two Millions of Plate, and another Ship commanded by John de la Torre, very richly laden; another man of War of ſome value, with a Portugal Prize, and a ſmall 1656. Vessel of Advice from the Vice-Roy of Mexico, escaped to Gibralter. In the Vice-Admiral which was set on fire by the Spaniards themselves, to prevent being taken prisoners, was the Marques of Baydex with his whole family: there perished in this Combustion (besides a number of less Note) the Marques himself, with his wife and his eldest Daughter, who was going into Spain to be married to the Duke of Medina Celi; there were saved from this fire, the Marques his eldest Son Don Francisco de Lopez, a younger Son Don Joseph de Sunega, and two Daughters Donna Josepha, and Catalina, with about ninety others. In the Rear-Admiral was also taken prisoner Don Diego de Villa Alva, Governour of the Havana. It was related by the young Marques Francisco de Lopez, who with his Brother and Sisters was brought up to London, and there for a while detained Prisoners, that the Cities of Lima and Calao in Peru, were about five Months before destroyed by an Earthquake and fire raining from Heaven, in which Ruine there perished above 11000 Spaniards, but of Indians not above 100: also that the Mountains of Potosi being laid level, the Gold and Silver Mines were thereby utterly destroyed. This enterprize near Cadiz purchased no less profit than honour to the performers thereof, and to the chief in Power. As for the Spanish young Nobles that were taken, the Protector, to give him his due, dealt very nobly by them, and after no very long time of detention, dismist them home without any Ransom.

The Parliament assemble.

On the 17 th. of September (the time appointed) a Parliament assembled at Westminster, and chose for their Speaker Sir Tho. Widdrington, none were to be admitted in this Convention, by the Instrument of Government, but such as after their elections should be approved of, & allowed by the Councel, & there were many discontented persons chosen of those that were dismissed at the last dissolution of what remained of the Long Parliament, and others of the Fifth-Monarchy Principle, that the Protector thought it not safe to admit into the House, till some Laws should be passed for the better strengthning of his Authority, so that till the 26 th. of June the proceeding went on smoothly enough, and on that day the Parliament adjourned it self to the 20 th. of January following, and passed some Acts, the principal whereof were:

An Act for Renouncing and Disanulling the Title of Charles Stuart unto the Nations of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

An Act for the securing of his Highness the Lords Protectors Person, and the continuance of the Nation in security and peace.

A Vote to assist his Highness in his War against the Spaniard, which they declare to have been undertaken upon just ground.

An Act for preventing the multiplicity of Buildings within 10 miles of London; the Substance of which was That for every House built from such a time within that Compass, upon a new Foundation there should be paid a Years Rent to the Protector.

The Humble Petition and Advice, was a Model of Government, with which they several times waited upon the Protector at White-Hal, to desire him to take the Chief Government of the Nations upon him, with the Title of KING; of which the Power he already had, the Name only he wanted: This Offer was brought to an open Conference, but it was first for a long time together gently and tenderly toucht upon, as springing from a Motion suddenly started by some of the Protectors friends. When as sure enough they did but work after the Copy secretly prescribed them, and as they had private encouragement and Instructions from the person they seemed to court. As oft as the Members made their Addresses to him with this Humble Petition and Advice, he still desired further time of deliberation, before he could positively determine in a matter of so great weight and concernment; till at length being requested to give his final Answer, he returned (after he had several times sifted his Officers, to see how they stood affected; and found them so averse (the most part of them) that he thought it not safe to venture) That he could not take upon him the Government with that Title: Thus openly refusing (in regard matters were not brought to sufficient maturity) what it was generally more than believed, he had mainly pursued.

1656. The Parliament Petition and advise the Protector to take upon him the Title of King.

It must needs be thought high time for Cromwel's Convention to make Acts for the security of his Body, since there was now more noise than ever of a most desperate plot against it; the Criminals said to be of this plot, were Miles Sindercome, a Cashier'd and dis-satisfied Army man, Toop, one of Cromwels Life-Guard, Cecil and Bois, the last of whom a Priest belonging to Don Alonso de Cardenas (once Lieger Embassadour here from Spain) and by him instructed, as it was given out, to hire and set those other his Agents awork, comes off himself with a Non est inventus; Cecil and Toop pleaded they were drawn by Sindercombe; he on the other side, that he was trapann'd by them: Of the several Ambushes in this plot, thus runs the Story; At Hammersmith a House is hired on purpose, placing of an Engine called a Blunderbus, to shoot him as he goes to Hampton-Court; at Hide-Park Corner also he is waited for, as he goes to take the Air; as likewise at another house in Westminster, by which he was to the Parliament House. Lastly, when these took no effect, the next design was to set White-Hall on fire, by placing a Basket of combustible matter in the Chappel, with a Train laid to have taken fire at a prefixed time; which also some way or other happens to be discovered and prevented. In conclusion, he of the Life-Guard discovers all, and both he and Cecil have their pardons, he for his discovery, and Cecil for his free Confession, and the sorrow he expresseth: Sindercombe boldly and sturdily standing it out, and denying all at the Court commonly called the Upper-Bench, before Cromwels Attorney-General, was nevertheless cast by the Witness of his two fellow Conspirators who left him in the lurch, and was Tentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn; in the mean time being kept close prisoner in the Tower, that very morning he was to have been executed, he was found dead in the Chamber, being reported to have snufft up into his head a certain poysonous powder to avert the shame and misery of the execution

The trial of James Naylour before the Parliament.

Memorable alſo was the Trial (hapning a little before this diſcovery) of one James Naylour, the great Champion and Ring-leader of the Sect called Quakers, who having ſpread his Doctrine, and gained many Proſelytes to it in divers parts of the Nation, was more eſpecially taken notice of at Briſtol, and from thence was brought up to London, attended by ſeveral men and women of his Opinion, who all the way they came (the women eſpecially) are ſaid to have ſung Hoſanna's, and to have uſed the ſame kind of expreſſions toward him, as antiently the people of the Jews did to our Saviour, when he rode triumphant into Jeruſalem: The Parliament took it upon them to judge him themſelves, before whom being convented, he was charged of Blaſphemy, for aſſuming to himſelf Divine Honours, and ſuch Attributes as were due unto Chriſt only: After he had uſed many cunning Sophiſms and evaſions to clear himſelf, ſuch as argued him not altogether ignorant of humane Letters, he was nevertheleſs ſentenced by the Houſe to be (firſt at London) publickly whipt, pilloried, and ſtigmatized as a Blaſphemer, then to be conveyed to Briſtol, there to be alſo whipt; laſtly, to be brought back to London, to remain in Bridewel during pleaſure: which Sentence was punctually inflicted upon him.

His Sentence.

The King now in Flanders, having his reſidence for the moſt part at Bruges, had upon hopes of the good ſucceſs of thoſe his Subjects of England, who now began again buſily to ſtir for him in all parts of the Nation, embodied together ſeveral Regiments, conſiſting of ſuch Engliſh, Scotiſh, and Iriſh, as he recalled out of the Service of the French King, and thoſe that came in to him from other parts, whoſe Colonels were the Duke of Ormond, the Earl of Rochester, the Lords Wentworth and Gerard, and Lieutenant General Middleton; theſe Forces he kept quartered upon the Sea-coaſt, to have been in readineſs, if occaſion were, to have ſeconded thoſe in England, Monſieur Marſin, an expert Souldier, formerly Lieutenant General to the Prince of Conde, being deſigned to have conducted this Army; but the Counſels of his friends that acted for him in England; being from time to time betray'd, and his Majeſty not being in a capacity to keep his men in continual pay, he took the opportunity, ſince he could not make uſe of them himſelf, to gratifie a power that had obliged him, and which ſtood in need of reſolute men, and thereupon conſigned them to the Service of the King of Spain.

The King keeps an Army in Flanders.

1657. In vain did Cromwel think to be acknowledged the Protector of the three Nations, ſince all the ſeveral Intereſts therein, how contrary ſoever among themſelves, attempted at one time or other, to ſhake off the Yoke of his Protection: yet as much in vain did both, all that already, and thoſe that at preſent atempted to ſtrive, Oliver being ſtill too cunning and too quick for them all; for on the 19 th. of April 1657. at a certain Houſe in Shoreditch, were apprehended a diſcontented party formerly in the Army, that went under the Name of Fifth-Monarchy-men, ſuch as taking upon them to be the Champions of Chriſt's Monarchy on Earth, renounced all Monarchy beſide; the chief of whom were Thomas Venner, a Wine-Cooper-prædicant (whom we ſhall have occaſion to take more notice of hereafter (Aſhton, Hopkins, Gowler, and Gray their Scribe: they had appointed to Rendezvouze that night at Mile-End-Green, and thence to have marched into ſome other Counties to joyn with others of their party, that were ready to ſhew themſelves upon the firſt opportunity; there was taken with them, beſides a great quantity of Arms, and certain printed Papers (that were to be diſperſed) a Standard with a Lion couchant, gules, in a field argent, and having this Motto, Who ſhall rouſe him? There were alſo taken into cuſtody Major General Harriſon, Captain Lawſon late Vice-Admiral, Colonel Rich, and Major Danvers; whereof the firſt was committed to the Sergeant at Arms, and the reſt to other priſons. 1657.

Major Gen. Harriſon and others ſecured.

The Spaniards were very much diſtreſſed in all parts by the War with the Protector, and on the 20 th. of April ſo gallant an Action was performed by General Blake in part of their Dominion, that the like hath ſcarce been mentioned in Story.

Gen. Blakes ſucceſsful enterprize againſt the Spaniard at Santa Cruz.

The General lying with ſome Ships near Cadiz to watch for the return of the Spaniſh plate-Fleet, had intelligence that they had put into the Bay of Santa Cruz in the Iſland of Teneriff, hereupon he weighed anchor on the 13 th. of April, and on the 20 th. rode with his Ships off the offing at Santa Cruz, where he diſcerned the Spaniſh fleet to the number of ſixteen, barricadoed in the Bay in a ſemicircular manner. Near to the mouth of the Haven a Caſtle is placed, which was then well fortified with great Ordnance, and beſides that, there were ſeven Forts round about the Bay, with ſix, four, and three great Guns on each, all united by a Line of communication from Fort to Fort, and well lined with Muſquettiers, and Don Diego Diagues the Spaniſh General of the Fleet upon ſight of Blakes fleet cauſed all the ſmaller ſhips to be moored cloſe to the ſhore, and ſet ſix great Gallions well manned further out at anchor, with their broad ſides at Sea.

Blake having well conſidered this poſture of the enemy, ſent Captain Stayner Commander of the Speaker Frigot with a Squadron into the Bay, who by eight the next morning fell pell-mell on the Spaniſh ſhips, but Blake who would have his ſhare of the toil and glory of ſo brave an enterprize immediately ſeconded Stayner, and placed ſome ſhips to pour their broad-ſides into the Caſtles and Forts, whilſt he with Stayner fought the Spaniſh Fleet (which was not inferior in number to the Engliſh, and much better manned) and by two in the afternoon they gained an intire Victory, but the General perceiving he could not bring off the Ships ſet them all on fire, but one that was ſunck, and when this Service was performed, the

1656. wind even to wonder, which before blew ſtrong into the Bay ſuddenly veer'd about to South-Weſt (which brought our Ships ſafe out to Sea.)

The news of this ſucceſs of Blake was ſo grateful to the Protector and the Parliament that they ordered him a Jewel of five hundred pound, and an hundred pound was given to the Meſſenger that brought the Letters, and proportionable gratuities, and thanks to moſt of the Officers and Mariners.

An Army of Engliſh ſent to aid the French in Flanders. Montmedi, & St. Venant taken.

According to the Conditions of Agreement between England and France, the French King demanded Auxiliary forces from England to help him in his War againſt the Spaniard in Flanders, which was readily granted by the Protector, & 6000 Foot forthwith ordered to be ſent over, Commanded in Chief by Sir John Reynolds, one of Cromwels Knights, a man of good Courage and Reſolution, once Commiſſary General in Ireland: No ſooner were theſe Forces arrived in France, but the French by their help took two very advantageous places, Montmedi and St. Venant; nor was it long after ere they took the ſtrong Fort of Mardike, being of notable conſequence toward the ſpeedy gaining of Dunkirk: This Fort was immediately after it was taken conſigned by the French into the ſole poſſeſſion of Major General Morgan and the Engliſh, who preſently fell to fortifying of it, and in a ſhort while made it ſo impregnable, that when the Spaniard ſenſible how much it imported to the keeping of Dunkirk, to regain this fort, ſent a ſtrong power of men (among whom were two thouſand Scotch and Iriſh Reformadoes, aſſigned by our King to that Service, and commanded by his Brother the Duke of York) to ſet upon its recovery by a deſperate ſtorm, they were after a very gallant and reſolute effort upon the place, which continued for the ſpace of ſix houts, repelled in the end with the loſs of many men.

1658. The Protectors Inſtalment.

After Cromwel had given his final Anſwer to his Parliament, that he could not take upon him the Government with the Title of King, it was reſolved on, that the Title of Lord Protector ſhould be continued and inſerted in the Humble Petition and Advice, by which Title he was ſolemnly Inveſted (with much more Ceremony than before) on the 26 th. of June, before a great Aſſembly of people in Weſtminſter-Hall, where a fabrick was erected for that purpoſe, and a Chair of State placed for the Lord Protector, whoſe Inſtalment wanted but little of a Regal manner, and though he attained not the Crown, yet he had the Scepter, for there were four Emblems of Government preſented unto him by Sir Thomas Widdrington the Speaker (who at the delivery of them made an Oration to him, in which he amply deſcanted upon each of them) a purple Velvet Robe lined with Ermines, wherewith he was veſted by the Earl of Warwick; Commiſſioner Whitlock preſented a large Bible with Boſſes & Claſps richly Gilt, and a Scepter of Gold, and a Sword, which the Speaker girt about him: Thus attired, while he ſate in his Chair under a Canopy of State holding the Scepter in his hand, the herald ſtanding aloft, made a ſignal to the Trumpet to ſound thrice; after which he was proclaimed Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and then returned to White-Hall in State, having the Sword before him by the Earl of Warwick. He was likewiſe proclaimed not only in London, and other parts of England, but alſo in the chief Cities of Scotland and Ireland. And now he began to take the King upon him in his manner of living, and to Govern after a more Monarchical manner, and to model his Family according to the faſhion of a Kings Court; to which end he had his Yeomen of the Guard in their Livery of Gray-cloth, with Welts of Black Velvet, of whom Walter Strickland was Captain; his Lord Chamberlain was Sir Gilbert Pickering, the Lord Keeper of the Seal Nathaniel Fiennes; Lambert was Warden of the Cinque-Ports; Glyn Lord Chief Juſtice of England, and Steel (formerly Recorder of London) Lord Chief Baron: Moreover, being thus confirmed Protector by Authority of his Parliament, and having fortified himſelf by Alliances abroad (for beſides the Leagues with France, Sweden, the United States, and a fair Correſpondence with Denmark, he had alſo upon the coming of Don Franciſco de Mello Embaſſador, concluded a firm peace with Portugal) he began to make it his next care, for the better eſtabliſhing of himſelf, and ſtrengthning of his Intereſt at home, to advance his neareſt Friends and Relations, and to match his Children into the Nobleſt Families; his eldeſt Son Richard he called out of the Country, to inure him to a Court life, and an inſight into publike affairs, deſigning him for Succeſſion in the Protectorate, which the Univerſity of Oxford prudently foreſeeing (as the Learned were never found backward in complying with the times, and courting the riſing Sun) ſent their Agents and Proctors to him, to elect him their Chancellour, in which Honour he was ſolemnly Inſtalled at White-Hall: his ſecond Son Henry, he made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in the room of his Son-in-law Fleetwood, whom he recalled from thence, wanting, as he ſaid his preſence and Counſel: his two youngeſt Daughters he matched, Frances the younger to Mr. Robert Rich, Grand-Child to the then Earl of Warwick, and Mary the elder to the Lord Falconbridge, the Nuptials for them both being kept with much feſtivity and Splendor, both at White-Hall and Hampton-Court, and the Ladies are ſo vertuous they deſerved a better father.

Sir John Reynolds & his Company caſt away upon Goodwin Sands.

Scarce was the Mirth of theſe Solemnities over, when, to allay the Triumphs for the ſeveral Succeſſes of the Engliſh in Flanders, there arrived the News of the loſs of Sir John Reynolds General of the Forces in thoſe parts, who with Colonel White and ſome others, Imbarquing for England, by the way of Goodwin Sands, in a ſmall Veſſel, at a tempeſtuous ſeaſon, contrary to the perſwaſions of many (it is unſafe to venture againſt ill preſages) was caſt away with his whole Company. But here was ſomething more than ordinary in this haſty coming over of Reynolds and White, both ſeeming to prevent the arrival of each other; for whether Reynolds was ſent for by Cromwel, or ſuſpected the intention of White to be ſome Impeachment againſt him; his buſineſs probably was to defend himſelf, in reference to an Imputation of holding Correſpondence with the Royalty, becauſe he was prevailed with by the Duke of York.

1658. York, who always loved ſtout men, to give him a meeting between Dunkirk and Mardike, at which Parley, Reynolds was indeed not backward to render his Highneſs thoſe Honors and Civilities which were due to a perſon of his Illuſtrious Quality. Not many moneths before, there died at Sea as he was entring into the Sound of Plymouth, that valiant and expert Sea-man General Robert Blake, not long ſurviving his notable Exploit at Santa Cruz; the beſt Elogium that can be given of him, is the true rehearſal of his Actions; than which, ſaving that it was his misfortune to ſerve an Illegal Power, never were any performed at Sea more conducing to the Glory of our Engliſh Nation. Alſo Vice-Admiral Badily ended his Life on Land, whither he was come for the recovery of his Health; and at Jamaica there died Lieutenant General Brain, Commander in Chief of the Forces there.

Colonel Sexby one that was a Priſoner in the Tower upon ſome deſign againſt Cromwel on a Commonwealth accompt, died about this time, and his death was not without ſuſpition of poyſon: he was a virulent enemy to the late King, and all the Royal Line, and ſuſpected to have acted the horrid murder on him by cutting of his head, or aſſiſting therein with a vizor, for upon that action he was promoted from a private Trooper to the Command of a Regiment.

The laſt Convention having adjourned on the 26 th. of June, met again on the 20 th. of January following; and in this Seſſion, which differed from the other as much as one diſtinct Parliament could poſſibly have done from another, two very obſervable things are to be taken notice of, which gave more diſturbance to Cromwels Ambition and ſafety, than he with all his Policie and foreſight was aware of; the firſt was the admiſſion of thoſe Members which in the laſt Seſſion were kept out with a high hand, whom ſince the Injuſtice of the act did not reſtrain from excluding the time before, the conſideration of his Intereſt urged him now no leſs, but rather the more to have excluded them this time alſo; but he was obliged to the contrary by his Friends (if at leaſt they were his friends) of the laſt Convention, who made it one of the Articles in their Humble Petition and Advice, That thoſe perſons who are legally choſen by a free Election of the People to ſerve in Parliament, may not be excluded from doing their Duties, but by conſent of that Houſe whereof they are Members. The other was, the erecting of a new Convocation, intended (in imitation of the Old Conſtitution) for a Houſe of Lords, but they would not venture at firſt to call it by any other name than that of the other Houſe; it conſiſted partly of ſuch as he took for his eſpecial Favourites, Officers of the Army and others; many of which were pickt out of the Houſe of Commons to be conſtellated in the Other Houſe, partly of ſeveral of the late excluded Common-wealth-men, and ſuch likewiſe of the Army whom he thought hereby to draw off to his own Party, and about half a ſcore of the old Nobility were nominated, but refuſed to come. Now in this Contrivance of his, whatever his expectation of it was, he found himſelf very much deceived, ſince by this ſtrong inundation of the late excluded, and the tranſlation of ſeveral of his Friends of the Commons into his Other Houſe, his Intereſt there was ſo weakned, that his tranſlating alſo of a few of his Opponents (if he thought to make a counterpoiſe that way) vailed him little; for Sir Arthur Hazlerig, and the reſt of the ſticklers both diſdaining to accept of Cromwel's offered Baronage, and that by the addition of their own preſence they might ſtrengthen their own Party the more, took their places in the Houſe of Commons, by which means the Commonwealth faction grew ſo potent, and flew ſo high, that the other Houſe was not ſo much as taken notice of, except in way of deriſion and contempt; ſo far were they from being concurred with or owned in any of their Meſſages. Moreover, they began to call in queſtion what was done in the laſt Seſſion, as being invalid without their aſſent: So that the Humble Petition and Advice, which but lately made ſuch a noiſe, was like in a moment to come to nothing. This ſo incenſed the Protector, that in a great heat and paſſion he goes from his Councel, and notwithſtanding the earneſt diſſwaſion of ſome of the chief of them, takes a Hackney-Coach for haſte, and being come into his Other (or Lords) Houſe, ſends for the Houſe of Commons up to him, and for a preamble to their diſſolution, ſtanding under a Canopy of State, unfolds his mind to them in this following Speech; which we have thought remarkable enough to ſet down at large, in regard it plainly diſcovers (as averſe as he ſeemed from accepting the Kingly Title) his ſtrange perturbation of ſpirit, and how nettled to the quick he was to ſee himſelf croſt and curbed in the tendencie and progreſs he made thereunto, though by ways a little fetcht about, and under the ſhew of ſettlement and flouriſhing eſtate of the Nation.

The return of Cromwels Convention after their Adjournment, with the addition of the other Houſe.

The Humble Petition and Advice.

The Commons diſown the Other houſe, and begin to queſtion the Government

Cromwel diſſolves them.

I had very comfortable expectations that God would make the Meeting of the Parliament a Bleſſing; and the Lord be my Witneſs, I deſire the carrying on the Affairs of the Nation to theſe Ends. The Bleſſing which I mean, and which we ever climbed at, was Mercy, Truth, Righteouſneſs, and Peace, which I deſire may be improved.

That which brought me into the Capacity I now ſtand in, was the Petition and Advice given me by you, who in reference to the Ancient Conſtitution, did draw me to accept of the Place of Protector; There is not a man living can ſay I ſought it, no not a Man nor Woman treading upon Engliſh ground; but I contemplating the ſad Condition of theſe Nations, relieved from an Inteſtine War unto a ſix or ſeven years Peace, I did think the Nations happy therein. But to be Petitioned thereunto, and Adviſed by you to undertake ſuch a Government, a Burden too heavy for any Creature, and this to be done by the Houſe, that then had the Legiſlative Capacity, I did look that the ſame Men that made the Frame, ſhould make it good unto me: I can ſay in the preſence of God, in Compariſon of whom we are but like poor creeping Ants upon the Earth, I would have been glad to have lived under my Wood ſide, to have kept a flock of ſheep, rather than undertook ſuch a Place of Government as this is; but undertaking it by the Advice and Petition of You, I did look that you that had offered it unto me, ſhould make it good.

Olivers Speech at the Diſſolution of his laſt Parliament.

1657. I did tell you at a Conference concerning it, That I would not undertake it, unleſs there might be ſome other Perſons that might interpoſe between Me and the Houſe of Commons, who then had the Power to prevent tumultuary and popular Spirits; and it was granted I ſhould name any other Houſe; and I named it of Men that ſhall meet you whereſoever you go, and ſhake hands with you, and tell you it is not Titles, nor Lords, nor Party that they value, but a Chriſtian and an Engliſh Intereſt, Men of your own Rank and Quality, who will not only be a Ballance unto you, but to themſelves, while you love England and Religion.

Having proceeded upon theſe Terms, and finding ſuch a Spirit as is too much predominant, every thing being too high or too low, when Vertue, Honeſty, Piety, and Juſtice are omitted: I thought I had been doing that which was my Duty, and thought it would have ſatisfied You; but if every thing muſt be too high or too low, you are not to be ſatisfied. Again, I would not have accepted of the Government, unleſs I knew there would be a juſt Accord between the Governour and the Governed, unleſs they would take an Oath to make good what the Parliaments Petition and Advice adviſed me unto; upon that I took one Oath, and they took another Oath upon their part anſwerable to mine; and did not every one know upon what Condition they ſwore? God knows, I took it upon condition expreſſed in the Government; and I did think we had been upon a Foundation, and upon a Bottom, and thereupon I thought my ſelf bound to take it, and to be Adviſed by the Two Houſes of Parliament, We ſtanding unſettled till we were arrived at that: the Conſequences would neceſſarily have been Confuſion, if that had not been ſettled: Yet there are not Conſtituted Hereditary Lords, nor Hereditary Kings; the Power conſiſting in the Two Houſes and my ſelf: I do not ſay, that the meaning of your Oath was to You, That were to go againſt my own Principles, to enter upon another mans Conſcience; God will Judge between Me and You: If there had been in you any intention of Settlement, you would have ſettled upon this Baſis, and have offered your Judgment and opinion.

God is my Witneſs, I ſpeak it, it is evident to all the World, and people living, that a new buſineſs hath been ſeeking in the Army againſt this Actual Settlement by your Conſent; I do not ſpeak to theſe Gentlemen or Lords (pointing to his right hand) whatſoever you will call them, I ſpeak not this to them, but to you; you adviſed me to run into this Place, to be in a capacity by your Advice; yet inſtead of owning a thing taken for granted, ſome muſt have I know not what; and you have not only disjoyned your ſelves, but the whole Nation, which is in likelihood of running into more Confuſion, in this fifteen or ſixteen days that you have ſate, than it hath been from the riſing of the laſt Seſſion to this day, through the Intention of deviſing a Common-wealth again, that ſome of the People might be the Men that might rule all, and they are endeavouring to engage the Army to carry that thing; and hath that man been true to this Nation, whoſoever he be, eſpecially that hath taken an Oath thus to prevaricate: Theſe deſigns have been upon the Army, to break and divide us; I ſpeak this in the preſence of ſome of the Army, that theſe things have not been according to God, nor according to Truth (pretend what you will:) Theſe things tend to nothing elſe but the playing of the King of Scots his Game, if I may ſo call him; and I think my ſelf bound before God to do what I mean to prevent it. That which I told you in the Banqueting-Houſe was true, That there were preparations of Force to invade us; God is my Witneſs, it hath been confirmed to me ſince within a day, that the King of Scots hath an Army at the Water-ſide ready to be ſhipped for England; I have it from thoſe who have been Eye-witneſſes of it; and while it is doing, there are endeavours from ſome who are not far from this place, to ſtir up the people of this Town into a Tumulting, what if I ſaid into Rebellion; and I hope I ſhall make it appear to be no better, if God aſſiſt me; it hath been not only your endeavour to pervert the Army while you have been ſitting, and to draw them to ſtate the Queſtion about a Commonwealth, but ſome of you have been liſting of perſons by Commiſſion from Charles Stuart, to joyn with any Inſurrection that may be made: And what is like to come upon this (the Enemy being ready to Invade us) but even preſent Blood and Confuſion. And if this be ſo, as I do aſſign to this Cauſe, your not aſſenting to what you did Invite me to by the Petition and Advice, as that which might be the Settlement of the Nation, and if this be the end of your ſitting, and theſe be your Carriages, I think it high time that an end be put unto your ſitting; And I do declare to you, I do diſſolve this Parliament: and let God Judge between Me and You. At which many of the Commons cried, Amen. And ſo the Parliament was Diſſolved. 1657.

Thus was he driven from one Inconvenience to another, from the Inconvenience of a Parliament that croſt him, to the inconvenience of no Parliament at all, whereby he was much ſtreightned for want of thoſe ſupplies of Money which he expected.

Toward the later end of this year died the Protectors Son-in-law Mr. Robert Rich, and was but little above two Moneths ſurvived by his Grandfather the Earl of Warwick himſelf.

1658. The Spaniard diſperſed by the Engliſh in Jamaica.

The following year, 1658. begins with the News of a Victory at Jamaica (which came by an Expreſs from the Governor on the 8 th. of April) obtained by a Party of the Engliſh there, commanded by Major Richard Stevens, againſt 500 Spaniards, who under Don Chriſtopher Arnaldo Saſſer, having lately landed in that Iſland, and begun to fortifie themſelves at a place called St. Anne, were fiercely ſet upon by the Engliſh, and forced to flye into the Woods and Mountains; and another Body of Spaniards, conſiſting of 300, who had fortified themſelves at Chareras, in the North of the Iſland, were, by the Governor himſelf Colonel Doiley, driven quite out of their Hold, Don Franciſco de Prencia, the Maeſtro del Campo, with others, taken, many kil'd, and the reſt utterly diſperſ'd.

The attempts of the Royal party in behalf of his Majeſty, betrayed and diſcovered to the Protector.

Cromwell had no ſooner freed himſelf of the danger threatned him from his Parliament, but he is preſently alarm'd again by his old Enemy the Royalliſt, whom yet he had ſtill the Fortune to prevent by his Intelligence; however, he took all Advantages to provide ſtill more and more for his 1658. his Security, by making the most of all Plots and Designs whatsoever; and to this purpose he sends in all haste for the Lord Mayor (Ichburn was then the man) and Aldermen of the City, acquaints them with what he had discovered, of the busie actings against the Peace of the Commonwealth, aggravates the danger, recommends to them the setling of the Militia in trusty hands, causeth the Guards to be doubled, and strict Watch to be kept in all parts of the City, when as most of the principal suspected persons were already secured, as Sir William Compton, Brother to the Earl of Northampton, Sir William Clayton, Mr. John Russel, Brother to the Earl of Bedford, and many more, the whole Design being beforehand betrayed, by a Person formerly mentioned upon the same Account, and one Corcar, a Minister of Bourn in Sussex, and such others as had been long employed by Cromwell for the same purpose; the Marquess of Ormond, who indeed was the chief Manager of this intended general Rising for his Majesties Service throughout the whole Nation, and had to that end remain'd for a good while concealed in England, being narrowly watch'd and searched for; but he happily obtained an opportunity (by the help of one Dr. Quaterman) of shipping himself away at a Port-Town in Sussex: Among those that had been formerly imprisoned, were Dr. Huet, Minister of St. Gregories, and Sir Henry Slingsby; which last had been a Prisoner ever since the Rising in the West; yet being a Person who was known to bear no good will to the present Power, he is charged with an Intention of delivering up Hull, meerly upon the expressing of his Consent thereunto, to some that were sent to make the motion to him, and sift out his mind with purpose to betray him; and these were Major Waterhouse, Captain Overton, and Lieutenant Thompson; and the Doctor seems to have been no less hardy dealt with, considering what things were laid to his charge: which had they been true, would certainly never have been so utterly denied, at the very moment of his death, by a man of his known Honesty and Integrity: The rest that were taken afterwards were, Mr. John Mordant, Brother to the Earl of Peterborough, Mr. Manly a Merchant, Mr. Hartgil Baron, Mr. Stapely, Mr. Maunsel, M. Woodcock, Mr. Carrent, Mr. Jackson, and one Mallory, who is suspected to have been a Decoy to the rest; of whom, M. Mordant, Woodcock, Carrent, and divers others, were tried at a High-Court of Justice, which on the 25 th. of May was set up under the Presidentship of Commissioner Liste; all hitherto mentioned, except Sir Henry Slingsby, and Dr. Huet, having the good hap to come off with life: Sir Henry, and the Doctor, were the first brought to Tryal, and both of them sentenced to dye as Traytors: The first, upon the bare Testimony of those three men, who had so treacherously circumvented him, which in vain he pleaded; as also the impossibility, a Prisoner as he was, of performing what he was charged with; The other, as a Mute, disowning the Courts Authority, and thereupon denying to plead: The next was Mr. Mordant, who also at first disavowed the Courts Authority, but was at length prevailed with to plead, and in the end acquitted only by one Voice, in that fortunate interim, while Colonel Pride by reason of a Fit of the Stone wherewith he was troubled, had withdrawn himself from the Court, and staid somewhat longer than he intended; the other two being so far favoured, as to have their Sentence mitigated, were on the 8 th. of June Beheaded on Tower-Hill: The next that were tryed were Mr. Robert Woodcock, Captain Henry Mallory, and Sir Humphrey Bennet: The first made so handsome and discreet a defence for himself, that they could fasten no Accusation upon him, and so were forc'd to acquit him; Mallory, no doubt by precompact, confessed, was condemn'd, and not hanged: Of the rest that had to do with this High-Court, William Carrent was acquitted; Collonel Edward Ashton, and John Bettely; the the first in Tower-street, (the other in Cheapside) were hanged and quartered on the 7 th. of July; the same day Henry Fryer, ready to have been executed in Smithfield, and two daies after John Summer in Bishops-gate-street, and Oliver Allen in Grace-Church-street, had their Reprieves brought them: The same day the two last were Reprieved, Edmund Stacy, his Sentence remitted, was hanged near the Royal Exchange: In the mean time, Manly, Baron, and Maunsel aforementioned, with two others, namely, Edmund Seymour, and Guy Carlton, having made their escape, were at the Upper-Bench (as it was then called) Indicted of High-Treason, though absent, and out-lawed.

In Flanders Successes came on with a swift Carier; presently after the taking of Mardike Fort, Dunkirk was straightly begirt by the joynt Forces of the French and English, the French commanded by the Marshal of Turein, the English by the Lord Lockehart, Ambassador from the Protector to the French King, who was constituted General in the room of Sir John Reynolds deceased. The Relief of this so important a place (it being the chief Sea-Port, and as it were the Key of all Flanders) the Spaniards resolved to Assay, though with the hazard of a Pitch'd-field; and to that purpose they assembled together all the Force they could make, amounting to about seven thousand Foot, and nine thousand Horse, Commanded by Don John himself in person, together with the Duke of York, the Prince of Conde, and the Marquess of Caracene; and drawing down from Fuernes Fort, were engaged by the Marshal of Turein, and the Count of Schomberg joyning with Lockehart and his English Forces, who making their way (a good part of them) up a Sand-Hill, against the whole power of the Spaniards, were the main Instruments in gaining a clear and eminent Victory over the Spanish Army, most of the Infantry being either slain or taken; and among the taken were divers Officers of the Spanish Nobility, and Persons of high Quality, seventeen Colours, six great Guns, with the whole Baggage of the Field; the Prince of Conde was unhorsed in the Fight, and Mounted again by his Cosin Bonteville, who was thereby taken Prisoner in the Princes stead: There were slain of the English, Captain Shermin, and another Captain, five Lieutenants, and two Ensigns, with eighty Common Souldiers, besides three hundred wounded, and some mortally, among whom, Lieutenant Colonel Roger Fenwick, who who was reported a stout man, and his loss much bewailed: A day or two before this Battel, the Marshal of Hocquincourt (who had caused the important Town of Hesdin to revolt from the French to the Spaniard) was slain as he went out Picqueering upon a Party. No sooner was this Battel ended, but the French and English returned again afresh to the Siege of Dunkirk, which the Marques of Leda Governour thereof (who had been formerly sent Ambassador to the Protector) seeing now more straightly than ever inviron'd both by Land and Sea, whereby it was reduced to great Extremities; he resolute to defend the Town, made a bold sally forth, in which he received his mortal Wound: the Governors death, and the terror of the Granadoes shot into the Town, wrought so upon the Besieged, that they were speedily brought to Articles of Surrender, and on the 25*th.* of June, march'd out with Colours flying; so that the King of France in person, accompanied with the Cardinal Mazarini, took possession of the place, and immediately resigned it up into the hands of General Lockehart, in behalf of the Lord Protector, and the English.

Dunkirk surrendred to the French, and resigned into the hands of the English.

The death of Mrs. Eliz. Cleypool, Cromwel's second Daughter.

The sixth of August, Elizabeth the Protectors second Daughter died at Hampton-Court of an Apostem in some of the inward parts, which afflicted him very much, because he loved her above all his Children; and that sorrow was increased by the length of her Sickness, and the grievous torments she endur'd: A little before she expired (which was in much pain) the Delirium of her Sickness prompted her to utter many things, (which though formerly she thought, she yet durst not express,) against the Injustice of many of her Fathers Actions. She was married to one Cleypole, the Son of a private Gentleman of Lincolnshire, of a moderate Fortune; but she could not be confin'd to it, being of a Spirit as high, as if she had been born to that Greatness to which her Fathers Ambition had advanced her. She was of a very generous and obliging Disposition, and very much troubled at her Fathers Austerity, and oppression of the Royal Party, to several of whom she did many good offices. The Grief which the Protector had contracted for her death, was very much augmented by his Trouble, to discern, that the Discontents sprung up amongst many of the Inferiour Officers of the Army, were fomented by Fleetwood and Desborow; the first of whom married his Daughter, and the other his Sister, who with Berry and Cooper Colonels, and Sydenham and Pickering, two of the Privy-Councellors, were in a Confederacy against the present Government, in favour of a Common-wealth. And a while after he fell sick himself of a Tertian Feaver, which at first seem'd not to signifie much danger, but by degrees it grew upon him: Yet his Imagination was so far transported with Enthusiastick Ravings, that insensible of his own Danger, he affirm'd, That GOD had reserved him to greater Attempts, than ever yet had been performed by him; and that he was assured he should not dye of this Sickness. In which Extasie he was much heightned by Goodwine one of his Chaplains, who openly declared, GOD had heard the Prayers of his Servants for him, and given them his Life, and therefore he perswaded some of his Friends, to keep a kind of private Thanksgiving beforehand for his undoubted recovery. This Confidence amused his Physitians so much, that they were less regardful of his Condition. But nevertheless, it was advised he should be brought to White-Hall, where with more conveniency than at Hampton-Court, a respect might be had to his Health, and the Publick Affairs of the Nation, where he had not been many daies, e're it visibly appeared he had but a few more to live. He had some time before his Sickness appointed a Juncto or Committee of Nine, with whom he privately consulted in the most urgent Affairs of the Government. These were, Fleetwood, Fiennes, Desborow, Whalley, Thurloe, Lawrence, Berry, Cooper, and Goffe, which were mixed of both Factions, that is, of that of a Single Person, and that of a Common-Wealth, that he might displease neither, and that he might by that Confidence divert the later from Designs upon his Power.

Her Charity.

Cromwell falls sick at Hampton-Court.

He is removed from thence to White-Hall.

The Transaction between him and those about him concerning the naming of his Successor.

Upon Tuesday the 31*th.* of August, finding himself in danger, he commanded his Servants, and all other Persons, except M. Thurloe, and Dr. Thomas Goodwyne, out of the Room, and declared to them, That in regard he found his Sickness and Weakness increasing, he was resolved to declare his Successor, according to the power given him, by the * late Petition, and Advice; And therefore he desired them to take notice, that he Named and Declared his Son to succeed him accordingly. They asked him, which Son? He Replied, My Son Richard, my Eldest Son. Immediately thereupon, there came some Persons into the Room, whereby it hapned, that nothing further was said at that present. But * Mr. Thurloe, and Dr. Goodwyne immediately conferring together, did conceive that the Business was too great and weighty for them alone to bear the Burthen of the Attestation of it; and therefore Resolved to take the first Opportunity they could to move him again therein, and to desire him, for that Reason, to call some others, to whom he might communicate his Mind in that matter: But in regard that Relations and others (who perhaps would take it ill to be put out of the Room) were constantly there, they could not all that day, nor the next, gain any opportunity.

* A Systeme of Government, made in the pretended Parliament An. Dom. 1656.

* Cromwels Secretary of State.

But on Thursday, perceiving his Distemper very much to increase, and hourly gain upon him, They resolved not to defer it longer: And thereupon they asked him, Whether he remembred what he had said unto them the Tuesday before? Which he said, he did. They asked him, Whether he continued of the same mind or not, touching the succession of his Son Richard? He answered, That he did. They then told him, it would be requisite he should communicate his Pleasure to some others, and that the Declaration of the Business, was of too great Concernment and Consequence for them alone to undertake, if there should be Opposition; and therefore desired him to send forthwith for some others. He asked them for whom he should send? They replied, whom he pleased. Then send, said he, for the Committee 1659. mittee of Nine : Whereupon they ſent a Meſſenger forthwith to haſten them thither of whom three came immediately, Fiennes, Whaley, and Goff; and theſe five that that were then preſent, perceiving him ſtill to decline, went to the Bed-ſide, and asked one of them him, touching what he had declared to Dr. Goodwyne, and Mr. Thurloe. He thereupon ſaid again, That he would have his Son, his Son Richard to ſucceed him : and ſo without any more Diſcourſe; they withdrew from the Bed, and left him to his reſt. But within few Minutes came in Fleetwood and Desborow, upon the Summons that had been ſent them; to whom the aforeſaid five declared what had paſſed, and offered ſomewhat faintly to move Oliver to the Declaration of his mind again, which they as faintly refuſed; but were not much urged to it, they having at their firſt coming declared themſelves ſatisfied with the Atteſtation of five perſons, ſo well known and eſteemed of them.

Upon Friday (the third of September, the ſame Memorable Day of the Year, that in 1650. he overcame the Scots at Dunbar, and the Year following at Worceſter) at three of the Clock in the afternoon he departed this Life.

Thus after ſo many hazards in the Field, ſo many ambuſhes ſaid to have been laid againſt him at home, notwithſtanding the Multitude of Enemies, that, from all Parties and Intereſts whom his violent purſuit of Greatneſs had exaſperated, conſpired againſt his ſafety; contrary to the real belief of many men, the ill-bodings of ſome, and the earneſt wiſh of others, he died not of a violent, but in his Bed a natural Death. The day of his death was uſhered in by a Night as tempeſtuous as had been ſeen in this Age, as if the Elements had been in Combuſtion at the flight of a Spirit, which had made ſo great a Concuſſion in the Affairs of the World.

Cromwels deſcent and Character.

He was born in the Town of Huntington, and was the Son of a Second Brother of Sir Oliver Cromwel of Huntingtonſhire, a Perſon of Eminent Note in the late King's time; his Mother was the Daughter of Sir Richard Steward of the Iſle of Ely, and his Wife Elizabeth the Daughter of Sir James Bourchier, by whom he had three Sons (whereof one died young) and four Daughters.

His Family is ſaid to have originally derived the Name of Cromwel, from that Great Cromwel, who was Henry the Eighth's Vicar-General over the Spiritualities; their Lineal Deſcent was from one Williams of Glamorganſhire, who living Contemporary with this Lord Cromwel, and marrying his Daughter, in gratitude for the Favours he had done him, took his Name upon him, and transferred it to his own Poſterity. As for his Qualities, there is no doubt, though his Diſſimulation, his Ambition, and his many other Vices obſcured what was praiſe-worthy in him; yet there was ſomething of Generoſity in his Nature, as may be exemplified, in the particular care and regard he had for the Relations of ſome that had ſerved him faithfully, and died in his Service; which one that writ his Life, parallels with the Gratitude of the fore-mentioned Lord Thomas Cromwel, toward Seignior Friſcobald an Italian Merchant, from whom he had received Civilities.

By his Reputation in Arms, he was courted o 1659. feared by moſt of the Princes in Europe, and the King of France and Sweden were entred into ſo ſtrict a League with him, as might have troubled the whole world; but Cardinal Mazarine, the Chief Miniſter of France, held moſt ſecret Intelligence and Friendſhip with him. He was a man of ſingular Courage and Reſolution, and that attended with a moſt proſperous Stream of Fortune, which is not always the concomitant of Valour. He kept the Armies under him in ſo exact Diſcipline, that they rather ſeemed a Body of well-governed Citizens, than Souldiers: Swearing, Profaneneſs, Drunkenneſs, Murder, Rapine, Uncleanneſs, the Common Vices of other Souldiers, were not to be found amongſt his. His Ambition and deſire of Glory, excited him to make Attempts alſo in other Countries, in purſuance thereof, whereby a great Renown accrued to our Nation in all parts of the World. And had he not employed that Policie and ſagacity of Parts, which muſt be confeſſed to have been in him, to evil Ends, and by unheard of impieties Traiterouſly aſpired unto that higheſt pitch of Honour which belonged not to him, Uſurping his Majeſties Government, he might have been worthy of eminent Place and Dignity in it.

An hour after his death, there met together thoſe of the Privy-Councel then in Town, that had been the moſt zealous Promoters of the Petition and Advice, and beſt affected to that Government. Theſe were made acquainted by Thurloe, with what paſſed on Tueſday and Thurſday; and alſo, that Oliver had ſubſcribed a Paper long before his Death, touching the Succeſſion, wherein Fleetwood was declared Succeſſour; And that this Paper having been laid in a Cabinet, known only to Oliver and his Wife, and no Perſon more (as was thought) was ſearched for, but could not be found. They then agreed, to ſend two of their Number to Fleetwood and Desborow, and to know of them unfeinedly, whether they acquieſced in the Declaration that Oliver had made, touching the Succeſſion of his Son? Acquainting them, that they knew there had been a Paper ſubſcribed by Oliver in his life-time, to the effect aforeſaid: and therefore requeſted to know of them, whether if hereafter any ſuch Paper ſhould be found or produced, they would notwithſtanding ſubmit to the Laſt Will and Parol Declaration of Oliver? Whereto Fleetwood replied, and promiſed, as in the preſence of God, That if any ſuch Paper then were, or ſhould thenceforth be found or produced, yet he would not inſiſt thereupon, foraſmuch as he cordially acquieſced, as he ſaid, in the Succeſſion of Richard. And thereupon a Councel was forthwith ſummoned, where Fiennes and Thurloe gave an Accompt of Olivers Appointment of his Succeſſour. And Goodwyn, Whalley, and Goffe were called in, and atteſted the ſame upon their Oaths. And being withdrawn, the Councel unanimouſly declared their Satisfaction: Desborow having firſt ſtood up, and adjured them all in the Name of the Living God, that if any diſſatisfaction remained upon their Spirits, they would freely declare it; as he profeſſed he would have done, had any doubt remained with him. This paſſed; the Preſident and whole Councel Olivers Will concerning his Succeſſour, imparted to the Councel and Chief Officers.

They all conſent to the Election of Richard.

1659. went at once to congratulate Richard, and condole his Fathers Death.

Richard Cromwel proclaimed Protector by the City and chief Officers of the Army.

After the Congratulation, Strickland, Skippon, and some others of the Councel were sent to the City, who appeared very well satisfied with what was done; and the next morning a Proclamation was divulged, subscribed by Chiverton Lord Mayor of London, and as many of the Chief Officers of the Army, and Councellors of State as could be got together; wherein Richard Cromwel was at White-Hall, Charing-Cross, and several other publick places in London, proclaimed Protector of the Common-wealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland: about four of the Clock in the Afternoon, after the Proclamation, the Lord Mayor presented his Sword to him, which he presently returned; and after some Ceremonies passed (the Councel, and many Officers of State, and of the Army being present) Nathaniel Fiennes, one of the Commissioners of the Great Seal of England administred an Oath to him in these words:

The Oath administred to him by Fiennes.

I do in the presence, and by the Name of God Almighty, promise and swear, That to the uttermost of my Power, I will uphold and maintain the true Reformed Protestant Christian Religion in the purity thereof, as it is contained in the Holy Scripture of the Old and New Testament, to the uttermost of my Power and Understanding, and encourage the Profession and Professors of the same. And that to the utmost of my power, I will endeavour, as Chief Magistrate of these Nations, the maintenance and preservation of the Peace and Safety of the Just Rights and Priviledges of the People thereof. And that in all things, according to my best Knowledge and Power, I will Govern the people of these Nations acding to Law.

Thus far matters succeeded well; his Brother Henry Cromwel was Chief Governour of Ireland, and a Gentleman was sent to acquaint him with the present posture of Affairs. Of Scotland they had some doubt; but to endeavour to rectifie all things there, Richard sent that evening to Mr. Thomas Clarges (Brother-in-law to General Monk) to prevail with him, to go immediately into Scotland, with his Letters to Monk, to know how he stood affected to his Advancement: This Clarges was pitched upon as one who had great Interest in the General, and had been lately chosen by his procurement, upon the death of one Rowe, to be Agent for the Armies and Councel of Scotland and Ireland, an Imployment of good value, whereby he became interessed in the knowledge and Affections of the Officers of all the Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland; for the Regiments of that of Scotland, especially of the Horse were often changed, whereas the Irish Army continued still unchanged: And although at first his having been in the late Kings Service at Oxford, made them at White-Hall unwilling to imploy him; yet he was esteemed of a moderate Behaviour, and had so demeaned himself in the pretended Parliament in the Year 1656. by his actings against the Kingship of Cromwel, that they would not then disoblige him, lest it should seem to be for that Reason: Besides, all of the contrary faction (of which were the chief of the Army) professed a great esteem of him, not so much in respect of himself, but because it was believed Monk engaged him in those Counsels; and the opinion of that contributed more than any thing to divert Oliver from accepting the Crown. Clarges willingly accepted of this occasion to go to General Monk, to be able to inform himself particularly of his inclinations: For although he had a Relation to him by Marriage, the Generals so far distant Residence, gave him little opportunity of other Converse with him than by Letters. The City of London, and the generality of the people in England (having been wearied and tired with the miseries of War, and their Spirits subdued by the oppressions and Tyranny of Oliver Cromwel) seemed outwardly to comply with the necessity of the Time, and submit to an approbation of that they could not remedy. By subtile Contrivances, Congratulatory Addresses in all, or most Cities & Counties were framed, subscribed, & presented to him. In Scotland; by private advice to some of the Officers of the Army, things were so prepared, that when Mr. Clarges came thither, he found them all prepossessed, & doubting one the other; they liked, or seemed not to dislike all that was done at London. But the General himself and he had many secret Conferences, and the General then declared himself weary of the uncertain condition, wherin he found both himself and the Nation inthrall'd by the over-ruling Tyranny of the Souldiers (who made themselves a divided Interest from the rest of the people, so that they consulted of a paper to be drawn up to be presented to the new Protector, the heads whereof were to advise him to suppress the division in the Church, by countenancing a sober & Orthodox Ministry, to permit no Councels of Officers, and to model and put the Army into the hands of the * qualified Nobility, and Gentry of the Nations, as such whom the people might best trust: From this Conference which was managed by both, with much reservedness; Clarges began to perceive the General was in his Principles well fixed to restore his Country to its Antient Government, when ever a fit occasion should present it self for the attempt. With this paper, and a Letter of approbation of the choice of the Protector, Clarges returned to London to him; the Letter he delivered publikely, but the paper was privately communicated, and well liked of by him: and the prosecution of the advice thereof in his attempts to model the Armies, was the main cause of all the divisions which hapned in them, and the happy consequences thereof.

Mr. Tho. Clarges made choice of to be sent into Scotland to acquaint Gen. Monk with Richards Advancement.

By the same Arts, as those from the Cities and Counties in England, Addresses were promoted, and subscribed by all the Regiments in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging. Lockart Governour of Dunkirk, who had married his Couzin-Germane, was as forward as any to promote Addresses, both from that Garrison and the rest of the English under Major General Morgan, who were yet in the French Army, Commanded by Marshal Turenne, and had gained a great fame and reputation to their Countrey, by many signal Services in that Campagne; for by their valour chiefly 1658. chiefly, a great Victory had been obtained, as before mentioned, over the Spaniſh Army near Dunkirk, which was followed by the taking of that Town, and the Fort of Mardike, and the Towns and Forts of Bergen, Dixmude, Ferne, Oudenard, Mervin, Gravelin, and Ypre, which laſt place, taken about the beginning of October, old Style, was the firſt Military Succeſs that the Engliſh had abroad under Richards Government. Marſhal Turenne had not hopes ſo late in the year, to gain a place ſo conſiderable; but having beaten a party of five thouſand men under the Prince of Ligne that was ſent to joyn with ſome other forces, and to viſit that Garriſon in their march, he ſuppoſed that the Town miſſing the ſuccour they expected, might quickly be ſurrendred; there were in it about 2500 old Souldiers, beſides whom, all the Townſmen aſſiſted that were able to bear Arms, being in all about 4000; and it was taken in a fortnights Siege. After the Army had been two or three days before it, Turenne ſent for Major General Morgan, who commanded the Engliſh to order him to keep double Guards, for that he had certain Intelligence that the Prince of Conde intended with all the force he could get together, to put Relief into the place. Morgan informed him, his men were ſo expoſed, that he commonly loſt five or ſix every time they mounted the Guards, and therefore he propoſed, that rather than weary them out with ſo much continual duty the Town might be aſſaulted. Turenne who was a wary Captain, was unwilling to hazard the Reputation of that Army, which had been victorious by many proſperous Succeſſes that ſummer, and therefore at firſt rejected the advice; but Morgan preſſing more upon him, and offering himſelf with 600 Engliſh, to go on upon the ſtrongeſt part of the Town, he at laſt conſented. He was ſeconded by two Sergeant Majors, who each of them Commanded 600 French, and were to attaque two other places, at the ſame time that Morgan made his aſſault; but he with his Engliſh entred and gained moſt of the out-works, and turned the Cannon of the beſieged upon the Town, before his French Succours came in, and immediately after the Town was ſurrendred upon eaſie terms, the Prince of Ligne, Barbancon, and Arembeg, marched out with the Garriſon. Turenne imbraced Morgan after this Service; and though he had long before eſteemed him a very expert and valiant Captain, he ever after valued him as one of the braveſt Commanders of his time, and in the Report of this Action, to the moſt Chriſtian King he attributed the merit of it wholly to him; which occaſioned an Invitation of Morgan to Paris, where it was intimated to him, a good preſent of Plate was providing to gratifie his Services, but he whoſe modeſty made him ever prefer the vertue of generous actions, before the the Reward of them, choſe rather to return into England, to his Family and Relations, after his long and hazardous abſence.

The taking of Ypre by the Engliſh under. M. G. Morgan.

Some were willing to believe the new Protector had a good affection towards his Majeſty, and would uſe his power to his advantage, as ſoon as he ſhould be confirmed in it, and had the Army in his abſolute obedience, to which they were induced by the obſervation of his former deportment; for in his private Condition he demeaned himſelf with civility and reſpect to the Gentlemen of the Countrey where he lived, and was always ready to do Offices of kindneſs to perſons in diſtreſs, apparently diſliking the ſeverity of his father, and not averſe to overtures for his Majeſties Reſtitution; but it was afterwards evident, that he did but formalize in the doubtful time of his Authority; for when he ſaw himſelf owned and acknowledged by the Army and people, he was very much reſerved to all that wiſhed well to his Majeſty, and either really declined his Service, or had not vertue enough to reſiſt the temptation of greatneſs, or courage enough toward the declenſion of his power, to uſe that little which remained to attempt to free his Countrey from thraldom and oppreſſions.

The Young Protector not ſo great a wel-wiſher to his Majeſties cauſe as was believed.

In the firſt place, after his advancement to the Supreme Dignity, principal care was taken by him and his Councel, for the Interment of his Father, with all the State and Solemnity accuſtomed at Kings and Princes Funerals; and therefore ſearch is ſaid to have been made into the Records, to ſee what had been expended upon the Burial of King James, and the ſame Coſt, if not greater, was to be beſtowed on this: The Corps of his late Highneſs being embalmed and wrapt in Lead, was removed from White-Hall to Somerſet-Houſe, there to lie in Regal Pomp and State, a Spectacle to all comers; the order and manner whereof was briefly thus:

Four Rooms one within another were compleatly hung with black; the three firſt with Cloth, the fourth with Velvet, each Room was adorned with Scutcheons of his Arms, Crowned with the Imperial Crown, and at the upper-end of each Room, was placed a Chair of State, and over that, a Cloth of State, and over the Cloth, a large Majeſty Eſcutcheon, painted and guilt upon Taffata: In the fourth Room where the Corps were, there lay upon a Bed of State, raiſed by two gradual Aſcents, and covered with a large Pall of black Velvet, his Effigies veſted with a rich Suit, Kirtle, and a large Robe of Purple Velvet, Laced with Gold, and Furred with Ermines; to the kirtle was girt an embroyder'd belt, by which hung a Sword richly hatcht with gold, in the right hand was a golden Scepter, in the left a Globe, on the head a purple velvet Cap, furr'd with Ermines; behind was placed a Crown Imperial, ſet with precious Stones, upon a Chair and Cuſhion of tiſhued Gold, on each ſide a rich Sute of compleat Armour, and at his feet his Creſt: the Bed of State was incloſed with Rails and Ballaſters covered with Velvet, at each corner whereof, were Pillars adorned with Trophies of Military Honors, carved and guilt; on the tops of the Pillars were the Supporters of the Imperial Arms, bearing Streamers Crowned; at the Pedeſtals were Shields and Crowns guilt: within the Rayls ſtood eight ſilver Candleſticks, or Standards five foot high, with long Tapers of Virgin Wax burning in them, and next them four great Standards of his Arms ſet upright in Sockets, with the Guidons, great Banners, and Banrols of Taffata richly painted and guilt. The Effigies having for ſome time been ſeen in this poſture, was afterwards ſhewed in another room, veſted after the ſame manner, and attended with the ſame Ornaments, as is already deſcribed, and this continued until the day of conducting the funeral pomp to the Church, which was on the twenty third of November; for till 1658. then all things could not be prepared and made ready: and then the Effigies placed in a ſtately Funeral Chariot, covered with black Velvet, and drawn with ſix Horſes in like manner mantled, and adorned with black plumes of Feathers, was attended from Sommerſet-Houſe to Weſtminſter by all the Officers of his Houſhold, the chief Officers of the Army and Navy, the Magiſtracie of the City, the Judges at Law, the Embaſſadors and publike Miniſters of Forein States and Princes, the Members of the late Upper-Houſe, and of the Privy Councel, all in mourning, each Company being diſtinguiſhed by Drums, Trumpets, a Banner born by one of the Chief Ones, and a Horſe of State mantled with black Velvet, led alſo by ſome one of Eminencie. Laſtly, the Horſe of Honour trapped with Embroydery upon Crimſon Velvet, and adorned with white, red, and yellow Plumes, was led by the Maſter of the Horſe, with ſuch other like Formalities uſed at the Obſequies of great Perſons. At the Weſt-end of the Abby-Church, the Effigies being taken out of the Chariot, was carried through the Church un-a Canopy of State, born by ſix of his Gentlemen, up to the Eaſt-end where it was placed in a ſumptuous Catapalco, or Monument of Wood framed for the purpoſe, with Pilaſters and other Adornments of Architecture, carved, painted, and guilt, to remain for a certain time exhibited to publike view; a ſort of temporary Monument much uſed in Forein parts, at the death of great Princes: the Corps had been privately inhumed many days before the Solemnity in Henry the Sevenths Chappel.

The Solemnity of his Funeral.

As ſoon as the Ceremonious Rites of this great Burial were paſt, the Preparations for which had for a time very much put a ſtop to proceedings both Domeſtick and Forein, immediately other matters of publike concernment began ſeriouſly to be taken into conſideration, by the new Protector and his Councel. The firſt thing was the ſending of a Naval Supply to the King of Sweden, between whom and the old Protector there had been contracted a very firm and inviolable Amity, and Forces had been ſent to this Kings Aid out of this Nation, both for Land and Sea-ſervice; for the latter whereof, he now more than ever had occaſion to make up a good ſtout fleet; for after that by his Succeſs againſt the King of Denmark, he had won him to a Conceſſion of a great part of his Territories, and of half the Dominion of the Sonnd, and had at length withdrawn his Army, the King of Denmark judging the Conditions too hard on his ſide, and alledging them not to have been punctually obſerved by the Swede, began preſently after the departure of the Swediſh Army, to flie to Arms, for the recovery of what was loſt, being eſpecially encouraged therennto, by a certain aſſurance of Aid from the Hollander, beſides his entring into Confederacie with the Emperour, the King of Poland, and the Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, againſt the Swediſh King, who having quick Intelligence of the King of Denmark's Deſign, ſpeeded back with his Forces, and was ſet down before Copenhagen, ere the Danes were well aware of his coming, but the Daniſh King had before-hand (providing againſt the worſt that might happen) ſo well fortified and ſtored the City, that it was able to endure a long Siege; and now the Sovereignty of this famous Bay of the Baltick Sea, called the Sound, being thus diſputed between theſe two Kings, the Dutch thought it a matter of no ſmall advantage to them, that the Sound ſhould continue in the power of the Dane their conſtant Ally, leſt the Swede gaining too much ſway therein, they might be deprived of the benefit thereof, which was of high Concernment to them, and therefore made all poſſible haſte to ſet forth a Fleet, for the Relief and Supply of Copenhagen: the Engliſh on the other ſide, thought it no leſs imported them to help the Swede, though it were againſt the Dane and the Dutch, both of them our friends in outward appearance, leſt their joynt Intereſt and prevalence againſt the Swede, who of all other Potentates was the moſt firmly united in League to this State, might have proved prejudicial to us likewiſe in relation to the Sound, which alſo concerned us no leſs weightily than the Dutch, therefore a Squadron of luſty Frigots was ſent forth by this State under the Command of Sir G. Ayſcough toward the Sound, which having for ſome time been detained upon the Coaſt by contrary winds, and afterwards ſteering their courſe towards thoſe Northern Seas, which the extremity of the Winter had made innavigable, they were forced for that time to return not without ſome damage to the Ships, by reaſon of the Ice, and the loſs of ſome men, through the bitterneſs of the Weather in thoſe parts, ſo that this Enterprize was ſuſpended till the coming on of the Spring, and then a more powerful Fleet was ſet out under the Command of General Montague, Sir George Ayſcough being invited by the King of Sweden to take upon him a chief Command in his Navy.

A Squadron of Ships ſent towards the Sound.

Another greater fleet ſet out under Gen. Montague.

In the mean time, the Hollanders fleet led by General Opdam, and Witte Witteſon arriving at the Sonnd with relief for Copenhagen, were aſſailed by the Swediſh Rix-Admiral Charles Guſtave Wrangle, in which Battel the Dutch are ſaid to have received a notable Overthrow, ſeven of their Ships being loſt, and Witte Witteſon one of their Admirals, with many other perſons of Quality ſlain; nevertheleſs during the Fight, ſeveral Dutch Fluyts and Merchant-men paſſed by with proviſion to Copenhagen, which ſo ſtrengthned the Beſieged, that they thereby became inabled for the ſuſtaining of a long Siege, as hath ſince appeared, and not long after, the Swedes in a reſolute effort againſt the City, were repelled with the loſs of a great many men, and ſome of Eminencie.

The fight between the Swedes and the Dutch. Copenhagen relieved.

The War-like proceeding between the King of Sweden and Denmark.

And now in England, want of Moneys, and other preſſing occaſions of the State, required the ſudden calling of a Parliament: the young Protector iſſues out his Writs, ſummoning the Members to meet at Weſtminſter the 27 th. of January. Elections are made by the Counties, not without ſome Canvaſſing of Parties.

Moreover, according to the Conſtitution of the Government, Members were elected to the Commons Houſe for Ireland and Scotland, as well as England. The Elections were ſo diſpoſed in England, that many honeſt Gentlemen in all parts were choſen, but the Upper (for it did not yet aſpire to the Name of Lords) Houſe, was filled with

1658. with the chief Officers of the Army, whereof most were of such contemptible extraction, and education, that the Commons were unwillingly brought in any capacity whatsoever to own them. From the time of Summons of this Parliament, to their convening, Richard was frequently entertained with the fore-mentioned Addresses, which much heightned the confidence he had entertained of his future prosperity, and ma e him think of modelling the Councel conformable to designs he had of subjecting the Army to his intire Command, for the Councel, as the Government then stood, had a great co-ordination with him in the administration of it, and the major part consisted of such as countenanced in all their extravagancies the Officers of the Army, who were many of them Anabaptists and of other Sects.

He endeavours to new model his Councel.

He pretended not to remove any of the Councellors, but to add so many of his friends to them as might make the greater number firm to him, he proposed the Lord Broghil, and Faulconbridge, who had married his Sister, but they were not approved of; and instead of these, it was offered by those that opposed them, that four Colonels of the Army might be admitted, (viz.) Whaley, Goff, Berry, and Cooper: The first two had been of the late Kings Judges, but were affected to the Protector and his Family: the other two were factious and seditious. These Transactions were not agitated in open Councel, but privately treated of by particular persons; but so rumoured, that the Army began to be jealous of the Protector, and murmure at his actions; sometimes they would complain of the Company and Conversation he used, and at other times censure his Religion, exclaiming that Godliness was discouraged by him, and that he rather favoured those of loose Principles, than the zealous Professors of the Gospel. But in this he was injured, for if his private Condition represented him a kind of Libertine, he assumed together with the publike Person a more grave and circumspect behaviour, conformed himself to the constant observation of all Religious Duties, and was in appearance at least, if not really so, of a blameless Life and Conversation.

The Army grow jealous, and sentorious of him.

The Grandees of the Army, doubtful of the temper of the approaching Parliament, moved the Protector to call together some of the Officers of the Army to London, (as his Father was accustomed to do on the like occasions) to advise with him, to obviate any peril that might happen in the beginning of his Power, if the Parliament should attempt Innovations: He was a little surprized at this advice, but thought it not time to refuse it, and thereupon Letters were sent to as many of them as could be spared from their Charges, to repair to London, to be there at the opening of the Parliament. The Names of his Fathers Privy Councellors which acted and were continued under him, were Richard Laurence President; Nathaniel Fiennes, one of the Keepers of the Great Seal; John Thurloe, Secretary of State; General Montague, Sir Charles Woolsley, Colonel Philip Jones, Philip Lord Lisle, Son to the Earl of Leicester; Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Colonel Desborow, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Colonel Sydenham, Walter Strickland, Colonel Philip Skippon; of which the six last named, were favourers and abettors of the Army; Laurence the President was an Anabaptist, but somewhat moderate in his Opinion; the Lord Lisle was often absent and uncertain, endeavouring as much as he could to appear a Neuter. There was another whom I should have named, which was Mr. Major, the Protectors Wives Father, but his indisposition of health rendred him uncaple of action; Fleetwood and Desbrow had frequent Meetings at Desborow's house, who with the factious part of this Councel, and some of the Colonels of the Army that favoured them, which were Berry, Hewson, Cooper, and Lilburn, consulted to wrest the Power of the Army out of the Protectors hands; and in order thereunto, Desborow was sent to tell him, That the Army was filled with many jealousies and fears of Designs against it, which would put them into Mutiny, and inevitably hazard the subversion of the Government, unless some speedy remedy were taken for prevention, and that no better way could be thought on, than putting the Command of the Army into the hands of some person that had served with them, and of whose Courage, and Integrity to their Cause, may might have confidence and assurance; and immediately named Fleetwood to be the man, adding, That this would not only satisfie the Army, but give great content to the Godly party, (which was a name much used by all these Novelists) and free him from much of the trouble which rendred him now less intent in the more necessary parts of Government. To this he replied, That as to the fears and jealousies of the Army, when he knew their Grounds, he would give them what redress could be desired, not doubting but the Parliament now ready to sit down, would take care both for his and their security, and the peace and quiet of the Nations: But as to the Command of the Army, he freely told them, he should not think himself able to protect himself or them, if he should part with it, which his Fathers example confirmed him in. And with this answer dismissed him. His father, as was before mentioned, was much perplexed before he died, with many seditious Anabaptist Officers of the Army, who were impatient of his Government, but the fear and danger of a division, and respect to his person, kept them in some degree of Obedience; he displaced many of them before he died, and had reduced the rest, and wholly modelled the Army to depend on him, if he had lived a few moneths longer: he had introduced his Son my Lord Faulconbridge, and many others into Chief Commands, who were allied to him in blood, or by their advancement wholly depending on him: all this while matters were carried without much heat, and not out of possibility of accommodation when the Parliament sate down.

Desborow sent to the Protector to perswade him to resign the Command of the Army to Fleetwood.

At the prefixed time, the Parliament meets, consisting as the last Parliament had done in his Fathers time, of two Houses, the Commons, and the Other (which now began to be called the Upper-House) for the first was chosen Speaker, Chaloner Chute, a Lawyer, who within a short while fell sick unto death, as also Sir Lisebone Long

A Parliament called by the next Protector.

1659. Long Recorder of London, who was choſen pro tempore in his ſtead; For the later was choſen, Nathaniel Fiennes Lord Keeper of the Seal: The Act of Recognition of the Protector to be chief Governour of the Common-wealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging: Which was many daies debated in parts, and at laſt part of it reſolved in theſe words; viz. That it be part of this Bill to recognize and declare his Highneſs Richard Lord Protector and Chief Magiſtrate of the Common-wealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging. And it was added, That neither this nor any other Vote that is or ſhall be paſſed in order to this Bill, ſhall be of force or binding to the People untill the whole be paſſed. The Protector liked well theſe proceedings, and thought himſelf towards a good Settlement; but of thoſe that were zealous for a Common-wealth, there was in this Parliament ſuch a conſiderable number, who had ſo powerful Influence on publick Tranſactions, that to procraſtinate the time, they caſt in ſeveral prævious Debates, in which, nevertheleſs, the Aſſertors of the Protectors Intereſt being more in number, carried things to their own Advantage by the Major Vote, as particularly in the buſineſs of the Scotch and Iriſh Members to be continued in among them, and the owning of the Upper-Houſe, and holding an Entercourſe with them, after a long Conſultation in queſtion of their Authority. However, the Factious Counſellors which abetted Diſcontents in the Army, continued their Meetings to purſue their purpoſe of wreſting the Command of the Army out of his hands, and putting it under Fleetwood.

The King creates new Commiſſioners for the management of his Affairs in England.

Several Deſigns had been in vain undertaken for his Majeſties Reſtauration during the Uſurpation of Oliver Cromwell, which were chiefly managed by the Earl of Oxford, the Lord John Bellaſis, Sir John Greenvill, Sir William Compton, Colonel John Ruſſell, and Sir Richard Willis, who for their ſuppoſed conduct of the privacy of their Counſels, were commonly called, The ſeal'd Knott: But, though nothing was more prudently and ingeniouſly contrived, all their Conſultations were from time to time imparted to Thurloe by Sir Richard Willis, which was not yet known. Nevertheleſs, his Majeſty about this time thought fit to appoint new Commiſſioners, and ſent over into England a blank Commiſſion dated at Bruxells the 11*th.* day of March, in the 11*th.* year of his Reign, which was filled up with the Names of Arthur Anſley, Son to the Viſcount Valentia; John Mordant, Brother to the Earl of Peterborough; Sir John Greenvill, Sir Thomas Peyton, and William Legg; which was as followeth:

The form of the Commiſſion.

CHARLES by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France & Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To Our Right Truſty and Well-beloved, &c. And to every of them, Greeting. We do by theſe Preſents Conſtitute and Appoint you Our Commiſſioners, giving you or any one or more of you Power to Treat with any our Subjects of Our Kingdome of England, and Dominion of Wales, that are or have been in Arms againſt Us or Our Father of Bleſſed Memory, or that have contributed to the preſent Rebellion in England (Excepting ſuch as actually ſate in Judgement for the taking away the life of Our ſaid Father, or pleaded as Councel Learned againſt his life, or attended as Miniſters to that odious pretended Court, or laid hands on his perſon in the execution of that horrid Murther) And to aſſure them in Our Name, That if they ſhall forſake the preſent Rebellion, and joyn heartily and effectually for the ſuppreſſing of the ſame, and for Our Reſtauration to the Rights due to Us by the Laws of God, and of that Our Kingdome; That then We will not only freely pardon their former oppoſing Us and Our dear Father, and all other their Crimes and Offences in acting, adhering to or complying with the ſaid Rebellion; But that We will Recompenſe and Reward ſuch of them as ſhall by any remarkable Service merit of Us, either by reducing or rendring any Town, Fort, or Garriſon of the Rebells into Our hands, or into the poſſeſſion and power of you or of any other Truſtee, imployed by Us or you for Our Service: And what you or any one or more of you ſhall by vertue of this Our Commiſſion in Writing under your hands, or the hands of any one or more of you, promiſe in Our Name in this kind, We ſhall Ratifie and Confirm, and perform. Given at Our Court at Bruxells this 11*th. day of* March, 1659. in the Eleventh Year of Our Reign.

Theſe Gentlemen proceeded with much Warineſs and Diligence in the execution of this Commiſſion, the Effects whereof ſhall be made known hereafter; But in the mean time, we ſhall return to what paſſed between the Parliament and Army. Beſides the private Meetings of ſome ſelect Officers at Deſborows Houſe, the General Councel of Officers, (as they called themſelves) met in Fleetwoods Houſe, where they acted with as much formality, as if they had been the Supreme Legiſlators of the three Kingdoms.

It was a little before Cromwells Death, that great preparation was begun for the ſetting forth of a Fleet to the help of the Swedes againſt the Danes, and that under the Command of General Mountague, not did his death put a ſtop thereunto, Sir George Ayſcough being ſent with a Squadron of Ships, though hindred from coming up to joyn with them, by reaſon of the freezing of thoſe Seas, as hath been already mentioned; whereupon, for the better managing of the Charge, it was thought expedient that the Houſe of Commons ſhould be ingaged in it, and a Narrative Report was made to them by Secretary Thurloe about the later end of February this year, concerning the State of the War betwixt the Crowns of Sweden and Denmark, in relation to the Baltick Sea, and the Command of the Sound: This took

1659. so far, as to gain a Vote for the providing a considerable Navy for the preservation of Trade, which was forthwith Equipped, and General Mountagu sent with it to the Sound about the later end of March, who was so straightned in his Commission, that he lay there without doing any thing, till he was called back by that part of the Long Parliament that subverted the Power that sent him.

The Upper House (as it now began to be called in a strain somewhat nearer Lords House) favoured the Military Councel of Officers, but the Commons took much distast at it, as if it portended a kind of Force upon their Councels. The Protector in the mean time advised with his Friends, how to free himself from the Embarasments of the Officers of the Army; My Lord Faulconbridge, Colonel Ingoldsby, Col. Bridge, Col. Charles Howard, Major Knight, all Officers in the Army, and some few others, counselled him to send a party to Desbrow's house, to seize upon those that met there, which were Eight or Nine of the chief Confederates, and immediately to give their Commands to the next Officers to them, till he could have a fairer opportunity to put them into better hands; and to send for all the rest of the Officers to come to him, and to Command all of them to repair to their respective Commands, that were not obliged by Service in Parliament to attend that duty. These Counsels were very agreeable to his Inclination, but the Secretary of State and some others to whom he brake the business, diverted him from the first, but to the later, of dismissing the Officers, he readily consented; and the next day he sent for them, and dismissed them accordingly: And the same day that this was by him done, the Commons openly debated against this Assembly of Officers, and Voted, That during the Sitting of the Parliament, there should be no General Councel or meeting of the Officers of the Army, without direction, leave and authority of the Protector and both Houses of Parliament. And because in the Debate of these Questions, many that favoured the Army, had cunningly cast out some minatory Expressions, insinuating, That this way of proceeding might make them think themselves suspected, and provoke them to break forth into some act of opposition and disturbance, they passed another Resolve, That no person should have or continue Command in any of the Armies in England, Scotland, or Ireland, or any of the Dominions or Territories thereunto belonging, who shall refuse to subscribe, That he will not disturb or interrupt the free meeting in Parliament of any the Members of either House of Parliament, or their freedomes in their Debates and Councels. These were transmitted to the Upper House, to be confirmed there; but they made a slow progress in them upon divers late contracted Jealousies, not the least of which was from a late Vote of the Commons, wherein they declared at the acknowledgment of their Constitution, That their acknowledgment of that House for another House of Parliament, should not prejudice the Peerage of the Land, or their Priviledges: as also believing, that the Protector conspired with the Commons to weaken and divide, or subdue the Power of the Army; in which they were somewhat confirmed, for that these matters were Debated and Voted the same day he had dissolved the Councel of Officers, and dismissed them: The Protector had many of the chief Officers of the Army fixed to him, but the inferior sort who were of phanatick Opinions in Religion, and were more numerous, and had most influence upon the Souldiers, were for Fleetwood and Desborow: For it was artificially instill'd into their heads, That the Protector did intend to cast them out of their Places, and put the Army into the hands of the Nobility and Gentry of the Nation, thereby to bring in the King, and destroy that Liberty of the Gospell they had so long contended for. The Debate against the Army in the House of Commons, was on the 19*th.* day of April, from which time the meetings of the Officers were more frequent than before, and upon the 22 th. day, the Protector was informed, that they would either themselves dissolve the Parliament, or compell him to do it. He called his Confidents about him, and made preparations against all accidents that might happen; and in the Evening many of his Friends incouraged him to take Horse, and appear in the Heads of some Troops that were ready to receive him. While this was doing, the other party had drawn up some men in the several Avenues to White-Hall, and in St. James's Field, yet it was believed, if he had appeared with vigour and courage amongst them, respect of his Person would have prevailed much with the common Souldiers; but he was fearful, and unresolved, of a Spirit unbecoming the quality he assumed, and many of those about him were as irresolute as he, some advised one thing, some another, wasting their time in contradictions; and as it happens in the Consultations of fearful people, they debated many things fit to be done, till the time was past to put them in execution. Desbrow his Uncle came to him from the discontented Officers, and pressed him much to sign a Commission to Fines, to dissolve the Parliament, which he a great while obstinately refused, till Desbrow insolently told him, if he did it not, it should be done without him, and so urged by threats and importunities, he at length consented to do it.

The Inferior Officers of the Army jealous of the Commons and the Protector.

The discontented faction of the Army, in a posture of hostility against the Protector.

He is forc'd by Desbrow to sign a Commission to Fines, for the dissolving of the Parliament.

The next Morning, the House of Commons having heard of these Transactions at White-Hall, Adjourned themselves for three daies: but this their Adjournment proved a Total Dissolution, for those that had made this breach upon them, proceeded further to compleat their purposes, and besides the foresaid Commission directed to Fiennes, caused a Proclamation to come forth in the Protectors Name, to publish the Dissolution of the Parliament, in these words:

A Proclamation for the Dissolution of the Parliament.

WHereas We Summoned Our High Court of Parliament to Assemble and Meet together at Our City of Westminster the 27 th. day of January last, which hath continued untill this present day; And whereas We did by Our Commission under Our Great Seal of England bearing date at Westminster this present 22 th. day of April

The Upper House jealous of the proceedings of the Commons and the Protector.

1659. April for divers weighty Reasons declare our Pleasure and Resolution to dissolve the said Parliament, & to that end did thereby Constitute and appoint Our Right Trusty and Right welbeloved Counceller Nathaniel Fiennes, One of the Lord Keepers of Our Great Seal of England, and others Our Commissioners in Our Name, this said present Twenty second day of April, to dissolve Our said Parliament, which was by them done according to the tenor of the said Commission in the usual place; and by vertue thereof our said Parliament is Dissolved: Nevertheless, We have thought it necessary with the Advice of Our Privy Council, by this Our Proclamation, to publish and make known the same, to the end all persons whom it may concern, may take notice thereof. Given at Whitehal the Twenty second day of April, in the year of our Lord, 1659.

Desborow and Fleetwood promise the Protector, that his power and Dignity should be continued

Fleetwood and Desborow having (to get the power of the Army to them, and their Party) made this Breach upon the Parliament, and in it shaken the Protectors Government, intended of themselves, as it should seem, nothing less than to dethrone him, though by reason of what they had already done, they quickly found it was not in their power to prevent what they so little intended, they came to him together, and apart several times that day after it was done, and protested to him, That his Power in all things, but the immediate Command of the Army, should be preserved intire; and even in that, nothing should be done, but in his Name, and by his Privity; telling him, They had not taken this course, but upon certain Assurance of the Designs of the Kings Party, and others, to disturb the publick Peace, which nothing could prevent, but the breaking up of that Parliament.

He received not much Consolation from these discourses, and gave little credit to them, well knowing, that it was far easier to draw the Officers of the Army into Seditious courses, than to moderate them. He told them, he doubted not of their intentions, and that they had been practised upon to do that in hast, which they might have leisure enough to repent; and that they would find now they had made a Concussion of his power, it would be a Province too hard for them to re-settle it, and so it proved in effect; for at the first Meeting of the Officers at Wallingford House, after the emission of the afore-mentioned Proclamation, they would not hear of any thing in behalf of the Protector, and were so far from thinking of the continuance of his power, that when any thing was moved tending that way, it was obstructed, or diverted, by Propositions of Government. Yet at last, when they had determined, that the Chief Command of the Army should be in Fleetwood, with a power to dispose of all vacant Offices till farther Order, they were perswaded to allow the Protector a kind of Limited Supremacie (somewhat like that of a Duke of Venice.) But the next day, whilest many of the Superiour Officers met at Wallingford-House, in further consideration of a Model of Government, the inferiour Officers being the most numerous, assembled in the Chappel at St. James's, having Dr. Owen, and other Independant Ministers with them to assist at their Devotion; where the matter was so artificially so contrived, that the prosperity they enjoyed under the latter part of the Commons House of the Long Parliament, was much magnified; with some intimations of Advice to return to that Government, with which the Auditors were very much affected, but nothing more was done at that time. This was promoted by Lambert and his Friends wherein he appeared not openly himself, but set Colonel Lilburn to manage the Business, at whose Chamber his friends had private Junctoes.

The Officers of the Army oppose it.

1659. The Superiour Officers meet at Wallingford House, to consider of a Model of Government and the inferior at St. James's.

The next day Fleetwood and Desborow were allarmed with this Countermine against their Designs; for the Inferior officers came now to open Declaration of their forwardness to restore the latter part of the Long Parliament, and to restore to their Commands Lambert and the rest of the the Officers who had been displaced by Oliver Cromwel for dis-affection to him; yet with so much respect to the Protector, and his Family, that they would have an Honorable provision made for them. Fleetwood endeavoured to oppose this Torrent, suspecting Lambert's ambition would quickly supplant him, if he got power: but when he perceived it was already too great to be resisted, the Consideration thereof obliged both him and Desborow to comply, for the preservation of their Authority. However, to retard their proceedings, they propose, first, to have the Army setled and modelled in a way of Unity before they determined upon the Government, which was thought rational; and at a Meeting of a General Councel of Officers, in order thereunto, they removed the Protector from his Regiment, and the Colonels Ingoldsby, Howard, the Lord Faulconbridge, and Colonel Bridge from theirs: Colonel Norton they displaced from the Government of Portsmouth, which they gave to Colonel Whetham, and made Colonel Edward Salmon Governour of Hull, in the room of Colonel Smith, who, by the recommendation of Fleetwood, had the Command of that Garrison given him by Oliver Cromwel. To Colonel Sanders they gave the Protectors Regiment of Horse; to Colonel Rich that of Ingoldsby's; to Sir Arthur Hasserigg Colonel Howard's Regiment of Foot, with the Government of Barwick, Carlisle, and Tinmouth: To Lambert they gave the Lord Faulconbridge's Regiment; and to Okey that which was his own before, which was lately commanded by Colonel Bridge: Major Packer, and Captain Gladman, Anabaptist Officers, who had been by Oliver Cromwel displaced were restored to their Commands: The Inferior Officers, in all these respective Regiments, were suitably modelled according to the Opinion of their Colonels.

Several Col. removed from their Regiments, and others put in their rooms. As likewise Governours of Towns, and other Officers.

Thus Lambert was brought into the Army, wherein he quickly recovered much of his former power. After this, the Councel of Officers was reduced to a smaller Number.

The Officers of the Army consult about restoring the remnant of the Long Parliament.

The 29*th.* of April there met at Fleetwoods House, Lambert, Desborow, Sydenham, Cooper, John Jones, Berry, Hacker, Lilburn, Ashfield, Salmon, Zanchy, Okey, Sanders, Clark, all Colonels, and 1659. and Major General Kelſey, and Barkſtead the Lieutenant of the Tower, where they Debated the Election of a Councel, which ſhould have a Negative upon the Remnant Parliament, when it ſhould be reſtored: But after much Debate, that was thought fitter for the Debate of the Parliament than them.

They next conſult about ſome Articles, for the ſecurity of themſelves and their Friends, and for a Foundation, on which they would oblige their Parliament, to eſtabliſh the Common-wealth Government.

They ſend to treat with Vane, Haſlerig, and others.

Theſe Articles being digeſted into form, and agreed to by the General Councel a certain number of the Officers were deputed to meet with Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Haſlerig, Mr. Scot, and Major Salloway, the prime leading men in this Parliament, to conſider how they might be diſpoſed to conſent to them. Vane and thoſe with him had been Treated with apart; but when they came to publique diſcourſe, they were very reſerved in their Anſwers; yet they gave them hopes of their conſents, and of their endeavours to prevail upon others; but ſaid, they could not undertake any previous Agreement, to oblige the Parliament, without their Authority and conſent, at ſuch time as they were met together.

This caution of theirs was diſliked and ſuſpected by Fleetwood, Desborow, and Lambert; but the Inferior Officers were ſo far poſſeſſed in favour of them, that it was not time to contend. They therefore deſired them to uſe means, to draw as many of the Members as they could together with all convenient haſte, becauſe the Government was a kind of Inter-regnum; and the Officers in the mean time drew up a Declaration to invite them to ſit, which upon the ſixth of May was preſented to the Speaker by Lambert, with about 13 or 14 Officers of the Army in his Company. The Declaration it ſelf we have thought fit to inſert, to ſhew the inconſtancie of theſe new Politicians, that ſo ſoon altered from what they ſo ſolemnly declared: The Title was,

A Declaration of the Officers of the Army, inviting the Members of the Long Parliament, who continued ſitting till the 20*th.* of April, 1653. to return to the Exerciſe and Diſcharge of their Truſt.

The Army's Declaration, to invite the remnant of the Long Parliament to ſit again.

The Publique Concerments of this Common-wealth, being through a viciſſitude of Dangers, Deliverances, and Backſlidings of many, brought into that ſtate and poſture wherein they now ſtand, and our ſelves alſo contributing thereunto, by wandring divers ways from Righteous and equal parts; And although there have been many Eſſays to obviate the Dangers, and to ſettle the Nations in peace and proſperity, yet all have proved ineffectual; The only wiſe God, in the courſe of his Providence, diſappointing all Endeavours therein. And alſo obſerving to our great Grief, that the good Spirit which formerly appeared amongſt us, in the carrying on of this great Work, did daily decline; ſo as the Good Old Cauſe it ſelf became a Reproach: We have been led to look back, and to examine the Cauſe of the LORD*'s withdrawing his wonted preſence from us, and where we turned out of the way, that through Mercy we might return and give him the Glory.* 1659

And amongſt other things, calling to mind that the Long Parliament, conſiſting of thoſe Members who continued their ſitting until the 20th. of April, 1653. were eminent Aſſertors of that Cauſe, and had a ſpecial preſence of GOD with them, and were ſignally bleſſed in that Work, (the Deſires of many good people concurring with ours therein;) we judge it our Duty to invite the aforeſaid Members, to return to the Exerciſe and Diſcharge of their Truſt, as before the ſaid 20th. of April 1653.

And therefore we do hereby moſt earneſtly deſire the Parl. conſiſting of thoſe Members who continued to ſit ſince the Year 1648. until the 20th. of April, 1653. to return unto the Exerciſe and Diſcharge of their Truſt; and we ſhall be ready in our places, to yeeld them, as becomes us, our utmoſt Aſſiſtance to ſit in Safety, for the improving preſent Opportunities, for ſetling and ſecuring the Peace and Freedom of the Commonwealth, praying for the Preſence and Bleſſing of God upon their Endeavours.

6th. of May. Signed by the Direction of the Lord Fleetwood, and the Councel of Officers of the Army.

Thomas Sandford, Secretary.

They agree to accept of the Invitation.

And take their Places in the Houſe.

After the delivery of this, many of the moſt eminent Members of this Remnant of the Long Parliament, having before conſulted with as many of the reſt as were in London, came alſo and gave a Viſit to the Speaker, to ſignifie their willingneſs to return to the Exerciſe of their Truſt, (as they call'd it) in purſuance of the Invitation given them by the Army, and that they would meet the next morning, which was the 8*th.* of May, at 8 of the Clock in the Painted-Chamber, where they deſired his Preſence, to accompany them from thence to the Parliament-Houſe; which he accordingly did, and they all went together, and took their Places. Thus ended the Reign, or rather the Uſurpation of the Cromwels, being overthrown by thoſe of their neareſt Relations, from whom by Intereſt, they might have expected Support: But ſuch was the Fate of this ill-acquir'd Dominion, to be ſubverted in its greateſt Security, by the Ambition and Malice of thoſe that aſſiſted the Aſpirers in the obtaining of it.

General Monck seems to give his Consent to what was done in England.

Upon the Diſſolution of the Protectors Parliament, Diligence was uſed by Clarges to acquaint Monck with all Occurrences: But the Officers of the Army in Scotland, then in London, of Fleetwoods Party, had ſo diſperſed Letters amongſt their Friends, to ingage them for the reſtoring of this later part of the Long Parliament, that when he conven'd ſome of them at Edenburgh to ſound their Tempers, he perceived they had been wrought upon; and therefore he judged it moſt prudent, to ſeem to approve of what was done: And to that purpoſe, he writ a Letter ſigned by himſelf and his Officers, to the Officers at London, which gave them Aſſurance of his Adherence to them (but if Richard had not diſſolved his Parliament, Monck had then marched into England in favour of it.) They did not fear much any Storms from the Army in Ireland, who of themſelves could do little, without correſpondence from England or Scotland.

They publiſh their Intentions by a Declaration. The Words of the Declaration, extracted out of the Parliament Journals.

The firſt thing the Remnant Parliament did when they met, after Election of their Officers, was the paſſing a ſhort Declaration, which was ordered to be Printed and Publiſhed; in the Cloſe whereof they Declare; That they are Reſolved through the gracious Aſſiſtance of Almighty GOD, to apply themſelves to the Faithful Diſcharge of the Truſt repoſed in them; and to endeavour the Settlement of this Common-wealth upon ſuch a Foundation as may aſſert, eſtabliſh, and ſecure, the Property and Liberties of the People, in reference unto all, both as Men and as Chriſtians; and that without a Single Perſon, Kingſhip, or Houſe of Peers: And ſhall vigorouſly endeavour the carrying on of Reformation ſo much deſired, and ſo often declared for; to the end there may be a Godly and Faithful Magiſtracy and Miniſtry upheld and maintained in the Nations, to the Glory and Praiſe of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and to the reviving and making glad the Hearts of the Upright in the Land.

Sir George Booth, Mr. Pryn, and others, of the old Secluded Members, claim their priviledge of Sitting, but are kept out.

Sir George Booth, Colonel Roſſiter, Mr. Pryn, and ſome others, Members of the Commons Houſe of this Parliament, (formerly ſecluded by the Army) attempted to go into the Houſe, but were all kept back by AdjutantGen. Allen, except M. Pryn, who ſlipt in, but they would do nothing whileſt he was amongſt them, but adjourned till the afternoon; and when he again would have entered, he was ſtaid by ſome Officers of the Army.

About four daies after the preſent ſmall Parliament had ſate, which was ſpent in making a Committee of Safety, and diſpatching Intelligence of their being re-inſtated in their former Power, to ſeveral of their Members abſent in the Countrey, whom they had not diſabled from Sitting; the Officers of the Army preſent themſelves with their Petition and Addreſs, a thing they often inſiſted to have proſecuted, and was one of the occaſions that heightned the differences betwixt them and this Parliament.

The Title was, The Humble Petition and Addreſs of the Officers of the Army, to the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England. The Addreſs it ſelf was in theſe words following:

The Humble Petition and Addreſs of the Officers of the Army to the Remnant Parliament.

Calling to mind the former Declarations of Parl. and the Grounds therein inviting us to take up Arms, and thoſe many ſignal Providences, wherein the Lord hath owned You, and your Forces both by Sea and Land, in aſſerting that Righteous Cauſe, wherein the Civil and Religious Liberties of the people of theſe Nations were involved, ſo as that all open oppoſition was beaten down before you; and likewiſe weighing with our ſelves how in the ſeveral late Changes in Government, that Publick ſpirit, which appeared in that Work, hath ſince that time been diſcouraged, and another raiſed up, drawing back to the ſame things you had contended againſt, even to the hazarding the Eſſentials of that Cauſe; We did upon ſerious thoughts of heart think it our duty once more to appear againſt thoſe backſliding wayes, and Providence having brought the ſtate of Affairs to the condition they were in ſome few daies before your ſitting, we found it neceſſary to aſſert amongſt our ſelves ſome of the Fundamentals of our Good Old Cauſe, with ſome other things conducing to the Preſervation thereof, with a full and fixed reſolution, through the aſſiſtance of GOD, effectually, even to the hazard of our Lives, to endeavour the Recovery and Security of the ſame. And the ſame good Providence holding forth an opportunity to us, to open unto You a way for the further diſcharge of your remaining Truſt in Parliament, we did by our Declaration of this inſtant May, humbly deſire you would be pleaſed to return to the exerciſe and diſcharge thereof, as before the 20th. of April, 1653. And having to our great rejoycing ſeen your Declaration of the ſeventh Inſtant, ſhewing, that you are reſolved through the Gracious aſſiſtance of Almighty GOD, to apply your ſelves to the faithful diſcharge of the Truſt repoſed in you; and to endeavour the Settlement of this Common-wealth upon ſuch a Foundation, as may aſſert, eſtabliſh, and ſecure the Liberties of the People, in reference unto all, both as Men, and Chriſtians, and that without a Single Perſon, Kingſhip, or Houſe of Peers, reſolving vigorouſly the carrying on the Work of Reformation, ſo much deſired, and ſo often declared for, to the end there may a Godly and faithful Magiſtracy and Miniſtry upheld and maintained in theſe Nations; which ſo fully anſwers what our hearts were drawn

1659. drawn forth to deſire, that we could not any longer forbear to expreſs our thankfulneſs for this door of hope again opened towards the attaining a conſummation of thoſe things ſo much breathed after by the good People of this Common-wealth. And however we find our ſelves in ſome meaſure prevented, by the late Declaration and Reſolves of this Parliament: Yet this nevertheleſs, we have judged it our duty to repreſent what was chiefly and unanimouſly upon our hearts, when we ingaged in that which made way for your Return, which we humbly (as becomes us) lay before you:

1. That the Liberty of the Perſons, and Property of the Eſtates of all free people of theſe Nations, be maintained, preſerved, and kept inviolable according to Law, under the Government of a Free State and Common wealth, without a Single Perſon, Kingſhip, or Houſe of Peers.

2. That there may be ſuch a juſt and due Regulation of Law, and Courts of Juſtice and Equity, as that they may be a Protection, and not vexatious or oppreſſive to the people of theſe Nations.

3. That by an Act of Oblivion, all and every perſon and perſons who have ſince the 19 th. of April, 1653. mediately or immediately adviſed, acted, or done any matter or thing whatſoever, in reference to the ſeveral Changes or Alterations in the Government of theſe Nations ſince the ſaid 19 th. of April, 1653. or in order to the Publick Service, Peace, or Safety of theſe Nations, be Indempnified and ſaved harmleſs, to all intents and purpoſes whatſoever.

4. That all Laws, Ordinances, Declarations, and Eſtabliſhments made in the ſeveral Changes and Alterations of Government, that have been in theſe Nations ſince the 19*th.* of April aforeſaid, and not as yet particularly repealed, be deemed good in Law, untill particularly repealed.

5. That ſuch Debts as have been contracted for the publick ſervice and affairs of this Common-wealth, and for the Charges of the Government, ſince the 20*th.* of April, 1653. be carefully paid and ſatisfied.

6. That all perſons who profeſs Faith in GOD the Father, and in Jeſus Chriſt his Eternal Son the true God, and in the Holy Spirit, God Co-equal with the Father & the Son, one God bleſſed for ever, and do acknowledge the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament to be the revealed or Written Word or Will of God, ſhall not be reſtrained from their Profeſſion, but have due encouragement and equal protection in the profeſſion of their Faith and exerciſe of Religion, whileſt they abuſe not their Liberty to the civil injury of others, or diſturbance of others in their way of Worſhip: So that this Liberty be not extended to Popery or Prelacy, nor to ſuch as ſhall practiſe or hold forth Licentiouſneſs or prophaneſs under the profeſſion of Religion: And that all Laws, Statutes, Ordinances, and Clauſes in any Laws, Statutes, or Ordinances to the contrary, may be declared null, and void. 1659.

7. That a Godly, Faithful and Painful Goſpel-Preaching Miniſtry be every where encouraged, countenanced, and maintained.

8. That the Univerſities and Schools of Learning be ſo countenanc'd and reformed, as that they may become the Nurſeries of Piety and Learning.

9. That ſuch perſons as have at any time ſince the 20*th.* of May, 1642. aided, or aſſiſted or adhered to the late King Charles Stuart his Son, or any other perſon or perſons whatſoever of that Party, againſt the Parliament or Common-wealth of England, and all other perſons whatſoever that have made uſe of any Authority or Power under pretence of Law, or otherwiſe, to deprive or abridge any of the good People of theſe Nations of their Chriſtian Liberty, or have or ſhall expreſs themſelves in any way mockers, ſcoffers, or revilers of Godlineſs, or of the profeſſors thereof, or are otherwaies ſcandalous or looſe in their converſations, or have not given good ſatisfaction of their affection and faithfulneſs to this Cauſe, may be ſpeedily removed out of all places of Power or Truſt in the Magiſtracy, or other management of the Publick Affairs of theſe Nations, and that no ſuch perſons may be admitted unto any ſuch Place of Power or Truſt for the future:

10. And foraſmuch as no godly or other good Intereſt can be preſerved, or maintained, unleſs the perſons, who are chiefly 1659. chiefly intruſted with the management and exerciſe of the Government, be of ſuitable ſpirits to thoſe Intereſts, That thoſe who are or ſhall be intruſted therein, be ſuch perſons as ſhall be found to be moſt eminent for Godlineſs, faithfulneſs, and conſtancy to the good Cauſe and Intereſts of theſe Nations.

11. That to the end the Legiſlative Authority of this Common-wealth may not by their long ſitting become burthenſome or inconvenient, there may be effectual Proviſion made for a due Succeſſion thereof.

12. And for the better ſatisfaction, and more firm Union of the Forces of this Common-wealth, in this juncture of Affairs, for preſerving and maintaining the Principles and other matters thereunto ſubſervient: We do unanimouſly acknowledge and own the Lord Charles Fleetwood Lieutenant General of the Army, to be Commander in Chief of the Land-Forces of this Common-wealth.

13. That in order to the eſtabliſhing and ſecuring the Peace, Welfare, and Freedome of the People of theſe Nations for the ends before expreſſed, the Legiſlative power thereof may be in a Repreſentative of the People, conſiſting of a Houſe ſucceſſively choſen by the People in ſuch way and manner as this Parliament ſhall judge meet, and of a ſelect Senate, Co-ordinate in Power, of able and faithful perſons, eminent for Godlineſs, and ſuch as continue adhering to this Cauſe.

14. That the adminiſtration of all Executive Power of Government, may be in a Councel of State, conſiſting of a convenient number of Perſons qualified in all reſpects as aforeſaid.

15. That all Debts Contracted by his late Highneſs, or his Father, ſince the 15th. of December 1653. may be ſatisfied, and that an honourable Revenne of Ten thouſand pounds per annum, with a convenient Houſe, may be ſetled upon him, and his Heirs for ever; and Ten thouſand pounds per annum more upon him during life: And upon his Honourable Mother Eight Thouſand pounds per ann. during her life, To the end a mark of the high Eſteem this Nation hath of the good Service done by his Father, our ever Renowned General, may remain to Poſterity. Theſe having been the Thoughts and Deſires of our Hearts, unanimouſly agreed upon before Your Returning to Sit, and finding the ſpirits of divers of the honeſt faithful people of this Common-wealth, led forth for the ſame things, and your ſelves by your late Declaration and Reſolutions in a great meaſure aſſiſting them; We thought it our Duty to the Nations, to You, and to the Honeſt People, humbly to preſent theſe, and beg the Bleſſing and Preſence of the Lord with you in the Proſecution and bringing forth ſuch a Settlement as may be for the Honour of God, the Union, Joy and Rejoycing of all the Peaceable People of the Common-wealth. 1659.

And we ſhall pray, &c.

This Petition was preſented by Lambert the 12 th. day of May, accompanied with Deſborow and Barkſtead the Lieutenant of the Tower, with 12 other Colonels, and two Lieutenant Colonels, we find entred in the Parliament Journal the words which Lambert ſpake at the delivery of it, which were theſe:

Mr. Speaker,

WEE are Commanded by the Officers of the Army, to preſent before you their Humble Petition and Addreſs; there are ſeveral things contained in it, which have been a long time upon their hands, and no viſible way of redreſs: Finding to their great Joy and Satisfaction, that you are Returned; In diſcharge of their Truſt, they thought it not fit to neglect this opportunity, but have Commanded us to preſent this Petition.

Lambert's words to the Speaker at the delivery of the Humble Petition and Addreſs.

When he had ſaid theſe words, he withdrew, with thoſe that were with him; and the Houſe upon Debate Order'd their Speaker to return them the following Anſwer: Which is likewiſe entred in the Journal of that Daies Proceedings.

I Am

The Speakers Speech.

I am Commanded by the House to tell you, That they have read the Petition and Addres that you have made here to Us; They have commanded me likewise to tell you, That as they found your Affection before they came hither, so they find that Affection continuing.

For the things contained in your Petition, they are things of great weight, and many more things of great weight are lying before the House; and it is concerning that Settlement, for which the Divine Providence of GOD hath brought us hither, who we hope shall never depart from us.

The House finds in your Advice much of love and affection, and have commanded me to acknowledge that love and affection you have shewn, and to give you thanks, very hearty thanks for your love, and expressions of it; And accordingly in their Name I do give you very hearty thanks.

The House by Votes agreed to all the Articles of this Petition, at the first debate of it, except such as concerned the publick Revenue, Government, and the Protector, which were referred to a Committee, whom they directed to go to the Protector, and receive an acknowledgment from him of his submission to the Government, before they would do any thing for him, and take a State of his Debts: Which being declared to him, with the Resolve of the House, the occasion of that Message; After Consideration, he delivered the following answer to them in Writing, with his name to it.

The Protector Richard's submission to the Powers in being.

I Have perused the Resolve and Declaration which you were pleased to deliver to me the other night, and for the information touching what is mentioned in the said Resolve, I have caused a true state of my debts to be transcribed and annexed to this Paper, which will shew what they are, and how they were contracted.

As to that part of the Resolve, whereby the Committee are to inform themselves, how far I do acquiesce in the Government of this Common-wealth, as it is declared by this Parliament.

I trust my past Carriage hitherto hath manifested my acquiescence in the Will and Disposition of GOD, and that I love and value the peace of this Common-wealth much above my own concernments; and I desire that by this, a measure of my future Deportment may be taken, which through the assistance of GOD shall be such as shall bear the same Witness, having I hope in some degree learned rather to reverence and submit to the hand of GOD, than to be unquiet under it. And (as to the late Providences that have fallen out amongst us) however, in respect of particular Engagements that lay upon me, I could not be active in making a change in the Government of the Nations, yet thorow the goodness of GOD, I can freely acquiesce in it, being made, and do hold my self obliged, as (with other men) I expect Protection from the present Government, so to demean my self with all peaceableness under it, and to procure to the utmost of my power, that all, in whom I have any Interest, do the same.

Richard Cromwel.

A Schedule of his Debts was annexed to this Paper: what was contracted for the Funeral of his Father, they absolutely rejected, and made slow Progres in the rest, and delayed to settle any Revenue upon him or his Mother, as was desired; but gave him two thousand pounds to discharge part of his own private debts, and required him, and all his Dependents, to remove from White-Hall in six days. Fleetwood discovered a little discontent at this contempt put upon his Brother Cromwel, and that Family; but as soon as it was ordered that he should be Commander in chief of all the Armies and Land Forces in England, Scotland, and Ireland, for one year, in compliance with the twelfth Article of the Armies Petition and Addres, he was less solicitous in the concernments of his Wives Family: when the House voted he should command the Armies, they likewise voted, he should have power to Sign and Seal such Commissions, for the Constitution of Officers under him, as should be approved by the Parliament, and nominated by Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Haslerig, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, and the Colonels, Lambert, Desborow, Ludlow, and Berry, or the major part of them, who were made Commissioners for that purpose. And for his better Establishment, they directed a Bill to be prepared and brought into the House to be passed into an Act for his constitution: Which was done accordingly; but upon the second reading of it, they would not admit of that clause, to authorize him to Sign Commissions, but Ordered, That all Commissions, both to the Commission Officers of the Army, and the Captains of the Fleet, should be Signed by the Speaker of the Parliament of the Common-wealth of England, to be written by the Clerks attending the Council of State, and delivered to the Officers gratis, by the Speaker in the Parliament House. They also at the same time, Ordered, That the Government of Ireland should be by Commissioners nominated and appointed by Parliament, and not by one Person, and that Colonel Henry Cromwel should be acquainted with the Order, and required forthwith to repair to the Parliament. This Gentleman had made himself very popular in Ireland, in his Government of that Kingdom, under his Father, and his Brother; but in regard there was a Council co-ordinate with him in civil matters, many of the members whereof were of severe and rigid behaviour, the generosity of his disposition was somewhat overruled; nevertheless, most people in distress there did receive such effects of his civility, where he had any manner of capacity to shew it, That they acknowledged he deserved to have been the Son of a better Father.

Fleetwood voted Commander in chief of all the Forces.

All Commissions to the Officers of the Army, ordered to be Signed and given by the Speaker.

Henry Cromwell called from the Government of Ireland.

He had the Irish Army under good Discipline, and was so well beloved of the Officers, that it is probable he would not have consented to the change of Government, if he had had time to prepare against it; For his Brother gave him no intimation of what had happened, nor any Commands to appear on his behalf; what he had heard, being only from the intelligence of private Friends. At the first Alarm, he advised with his Confidents what to do, and to prevent Confederacies against him, by any Combinations of the Officers of his Army, he commanded all of them to their charges, and (to uſe his own words) not to hearken to any deſign of Innovation, how ſpecioufly ſoever the ſame might be preſented to them. Likewiſe he diſpatched Cornet Monck to Scotland to General Monck, (who came thither not till fifteen days after the alteration of Government) to inform himſelf how he and his Army ſtood affected to it, who returned no other anſwer than a Copy of the Letters the Officers of his Army had obliged him to ſend to the Parliament.

In all probability, if Colonel Henry Cromwell had drawn his Army together, and fixed them to his Authority, and then declared againſt their proceedings at London, he might have ſhaken much the new foundation of the Common-wealth; for the Armies in England and Scotland were not then modelled, and the Officers many of them (as hath been ſaid) relations or dependents of the Family of the Cromwells; but he was ſo doubtful of the ſucceſs that he undertook nothing, but peaceably ſubmitted, as his Brother had done, (though in more generous terms) to the Authority then introduc'd.

We purpoſely omit many particulars of theſe tranſactions, and others in the Journals of the Parliament, as their conſtitution of a Council of State, for the more immediate executive power of the Common-wealth, the Nomination of Judges, Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, and Commiſſioners for the Admiralty, and Government of the Navy, and Colonel Henry Cromwells Letter to the Parliament, when he ſubmitted to it, as not very eſſentially pertinent to this Hiſtory.

Fleetwood and his Friends were troubled at the reſtriction of his Commiſſion, yet he diſſembled his paſſion, and yielded to neceſſity, till a more favourable conjunction might give him opportunity to inlarge his power: however, both he, Desborow, Lambert, and many of them were diſſatisfied with the way of receiving their Commiſſions from the hands of the Speaker, and would have remonſtrated againſt it; but by enquiring into the temper of the inferiour Officers, they found them well enough affected towards it, and therefore did not proceed for that time. And Fleetwood himſelf to diſſemble his acquieſcence with great ſubmiſſion, and Proteſtation of Obedience to the Parliament, received his Commiſſion in the Houſe, from the hands of the Speaker, and after him Lambert, Desborow, Berry, Ludlow, Sydenham, and the reſt of them in and about London, who had Commands in the Army.

Fleetwood, Lambert, and others receive their Commiſſions in the Houſe from the Speaker.

The Parliament now became confident of its Power, and meditated to ſubject the Army wholly to it (which made them jealous of each other.) Although all the Armies and Navy had declared their concurrence in obedience to them; yet they diſplaced thoſe Officers in both, whom they ſuſpected in any manner to have been affected to Cromwell, or Monarchical Government. The ſeven Commiſſioners before named, to whom the nomination of the Officers of the Army was firſt committed, were continued in that Authority, and very active in it. Thoſe of the Anabaptiſt perſwaſion, were by them eſteemed moſt firm to a Common-wealth, and by their information they were much guided in the diſpoſition of Places; but where any had been put out by Cromwell, for diſſatisfaction to him, they were reſtored as of courſe. Colonel Lockart, the Governour of Dunkirk, had made his ſubmiſſion; but ſhortly after, there was a deſperate Mutiny in the Garriſon, at firſt ſuſpected to be for the King, but it was quickly appeaſed, and found to be otherwiſe. And the better to regulate affairs there, and quiet the place, Lieutenant Colonel Pierſon, Colonel Aſhfield, and Colonel Packer, are forthwith ſent over. Thus all things ſucceeded fortunately to them. Embaſſadors from all parts making haſt to congratulate the felicity of their Government.

The Governour of Dunkirk ſubmits to the change of Government.

The Embaſſadour from the United Provinces, was prepared with his Credentialls for Audience within a fortnight after the firſt beginning of this New Common-wealth, and at his Audience, in the name of his Maſters, he made a more than ordinary Profeſſion of Amity, and deſire of Unity and Confederacy with them. The Commiſſioners, who had that in charge, made great diſpatch both in Modelling the Army and Navy. Peirſon and Maſon, two Anabaptiſts, Lieutenant Colonels under General Monck, undertook to know ſo well the Army in Scotland, that their information was much credited in the ſettling of it, and to weaken Monck's power, they had deſigned to remove thoſe he moſt truſted, and put others of their own Creatures into their places. Of all theſe paſſages the General had very good Intelligence, his Agent Clarges not omitting to acquaint him with all that paſſed with theſe Commiſſioners. And after a while, he took publick notice of it in a Letter to the Houſe, in which, among other Expreſſions, he told them he had heard of their intentions to diſplace many of his Officers, which he conceived they did not from any knowledge they had of their Perſons or Qualifications, but the informations of others; and that he thought himſelf as fit to be credited in that matter as any, and did aſſure them, they were all honeſt and ſtout men, and ſuch for whoſe fidelity and good behaviour he would be ingaged.

The Dutch Embaſſador courts our reſtored Senate in a high manner.

Gen. Monk digeſts not the Junto's Deſigns of Modelling his Army.

This Letter put a little ſtop to their Cariere, but did not divert their Reſolutions: yet to give him ſome ſatisfaction, they ſent him back word, they would be very careful in the placing or diſplacing of his Officers, and that in his own Regiments of Horſe and Foot, there ſhould be no alteration, till ſuch time as he were conſulted in it. Monck was not ſatisfied with their Anſwer, but privately adviſed ſome of thoſe Officers, whom he heard they would put from their Commands, to go to London, to ſolicite their own concernments, and as much as they could obſtruct and retard the proceedings of the Committee. That which was of moſt advantage to the preſervation of his Officers, was an Order made, That ſuch Officers as were new Conſtituted for Scotland or Ireland, becauſe they could not come to the Parliament to take their Commiſſions, ſhould receive them from ſuch Commiſſioners as ſhould be appointed for the Civil Government of thoſe Kingdoms doms respectively. And none being yet appointed for Scotland, that Affair rested a while in suspense, yet was not so far neglected as to hinder the designment of the remove of many, whom nevertheless the General underhand kept still in their Commands, till further order.

He uſeth his utmoſt induſtry to obſtruct it.

An Old Act of Assessment revived.

In the pretended Parliament begun at Westminster, in the Year 1656. an Act had passed for a three years Assessment upon England, Scotland, and Ireland, at 35000 li. per mensem on England, 6000 per mensem on Scotland, and 9000 a month on Ireland, to determine the 24th of June 1660. of which one years proportion was yet uncollected, which made the House to pass an Act on the 18th of June this year, to authorize the collecting of that money, knowing it to be less difficult to continue a Tax already imposed, than after the expiring of that to raise a new one. In this Act, they appoint the whole Years Assessment to be paid into the Treasury, one Moiety on, or before the tenth day of August, and the other on the tenth of October.

Commissioners appointed for the Government of Ireland.

Having, as is aforesaid, recalled Colonel Henry Cromwell from Ireland, they appoint for the Civil Government of that Kingdom certain Commissioners, namely, Steele, Robert Goodwin, Matthew Thomlinson, and John Jones; and for the Command of the Army, Colonel Edmund Ludlow, who with the Title of Lieutenant General, was immediately upon receipt of his Commission dispatch't away.

The King's Commissioners active endeavours to raise the Country for his Majesties Service.

In the mean time, the Kings Commissioners were not idle in engaging as many as they could for his Service; and Captain Titus was sent by his Majesty to treat with Major General Brown, and such others in the City of London as he knew to be well inclined to his Interest. When he came to London and sent to Brown, he refused to have any Communication with him, and therefore he used the mediation of Mr. Charlton, and Mr. Beverly of Lincolns-Inn to Treat with him, and they had several Conferences without any effect; for he being a Prudent wary man, was unwilling to hazard himself, till he saw some Body of Men together, to busie the Army, and divert the Forces in London and Westminster: Titus then addressed himself to Mr. Mordant, and the rest of his Majesties Commissioners, and was very assistant to them. So active were these Commissioners, that most of the Nobility and Gentry of England and Wales were engaged by them, and a day in July fixed for the Rising. Sir George Booth was to raise Lancashire and Cheshire. Sir Thomas Middleton, Shropshire and Flintshire. Sir John Carter, Denbighshire. The Earl of Stamford, Leicestershire. The Lord Willoughby of Parham (who also advanced money to buy Arms) Suffolk. Colonel Rossiter, Lincolnshire. Colonel Popham, Somersetshire and Wiltshire, and to secure Bristoll and Taunton. Mr. Edward Durch, and others, Berkshire, Major General Massey, & the Lord Herbert of Worcester, and Mr. How, Glocestershire. Sir William Compton, Sir Thomas Leverthorp, and Mr. Fanshall, Hartfordshire. Mr. Mordant, Sir Francis Vincent, and Sir Adam Brown, Surrey; with many more in all places too long to name.

The first Rising was to be of such as had never engaged on the Kings side in the late Wars, thereby to draw the Army to less opposition; for the Declaration had no mention of his Majestie, but was called, The Declaration of the Lords, Gentlemen, and Citizens, Freeholders and yeomen, in this once happy Nation. The words of it were these:

The Declation of Sir George Booth emitted at the time of his Rising.

SInce it hath pleased Almighty God to suffer the Spirit of Division to continue in this distracted Nation, and to leave us without any settled Foundation of Religion, Liberty, and Propriety, the Legislative Power usurped, at pleasure, and contemned; The Army raised at first for our Defence abused, and misled into unwarrantable Actions by the Cunning and Ambition of some of the Superiour Officers; No face of Government appearing either in any single Person, or a Body of men in Council lawfully Constituted, to whom the Grievances of the People may with any probability of Success be properly addressed. Therefore We being Conscious of our Duty, and sensible of our own and the Nations Ruine, if these Distractions continue, or issue in a more fixed oppression by some Settlement inconsistent with the Laws, Peace, and Interest of these Nations, have taken Arms in Defence of Our selves, and all others who will partake with us in the Vindication and Maintenance of the Freedoms of Parliaments against all Violence whatsoever, of the known Laws, Liberty, and Property of the Good People of this Nation, who at present groan under illegall, arbitrary, and insupportable Taxes and Payments unknown to our Ancestors. This being our Duty to GOD and to Man, and our only Design, We cannot despair of the Blessing of Him who gives Victory; nor of the chearful concurrence of all good People, nor of the undeceived part of the Army, whose Arrears and increase of future Pay, and advancement of high Command, We shall by all means procure, suffering no Imposition of force on any mans Conscience; And to this We doubt not but all honest English-men will say, Amen, Amen.

Sir George Booth's Rising aided by the Kings friends from all Parts.

But yet many of the Kings Friends in all parts were to bring in their Aids, Colonel Richard Arundel and Trelanny undertook, if his Majesty would bring five hundred Horse into Cornwall, and Arms for as many more, they would raise the other five hundred: And Major General Egerton did as much in Staffordshire; and many others in other Parts. The Preparation could not be expedited with that hast as was intended, so that the day of Rising was deferr'd to the first of August, and Mr. Cooper was sent by Mr. Mordant to his Majesty, to acquaint him with it; who was so soon dispatch't, that he returned in five days to those that sent him, to let them know, his Majesty would be present with them in short time: With him Colonel Roger Whitley came into England, with some verbal Instructions to Sir George Booth, and some blank Commissions to disperse in Lancashire, Cheshire, and Flintshire; He staid no longer in London, than to receive Mr. Mordant's Commands, and some of the forementioned Declarations to carry with him to Booth. Captain Titus was sent to the King, to let him know all was ready: His Majesty thereupon remov'd privately from Brussells to Calais, about the first of August, which was two days after Titus came to him: He had in his Company only the Marquess of Ormond, the Earl of Bristoll, Dr. Quatermaine, Mr. Daniel Oneal, and one Maurice Delaval, a Servant of the Marquess of Ormonds, with two other Servants, one belonging to the Earl of Bristoll, and the other to Oneal; nor did they travel thither together, but by two and two: His Majesty had only Dr. Quatermaine with him, and the first place he came to from Brussells was a little Village, where Monsieur Marsin met him, with whom he had much discourse about his Affairs. Marsin accompanied his Majesty to St. Omers, where they parted; and then he went directly to Calais, where the rest met him; but to avoid being known, they dispersed into several Lodgings, and his Majesty had with him only Maurice to wait on him. The Dukes of York and Glouceſter were at Breda, and were sent for to Brussells, but they arrived not till the day the King parted from thence, & after he was gone. The Duke of York with Titus followed his Majesty to Calais, but the Duke of Glouceſter by his Majesties appointment continued at Brussells, ready prepared to come over upon the first intimation. The King staid three days at Calais, and a Shallop was ready at Boloign for his Transportation into Kent, upon the first News of any considerable Party's being in Arms.

His Majesty removes privately from Brussells to Calais, to be ready if occasion were to come over.

The Duke of York follows from Breda.

The main of the Design prevented by discovery.

But in the height of this Expectation, one Mr. Baron arrived from Mordant with the ill News of the disappointment of much of the Design in all the South and West parts of England, which was thought to be discovered by a Letter intercepted at Reading from the Lady Mary Howard, about the latter end of July; but it was known long before that Letter, to Scot and some few other Members of the Council of State, which hastned them so much in a more than usual Care in modelling the Army and settling the whole Militia of the Kingdom, wherein the meanest Commission Officer in any of the Trained Bands, Troops, or Companies, was to be approved in Parliament; and they had privately laid a contrivance to have Souldiers at most of the Risings of the Kings Friends all over England: So that their accidental intercepting of the Lady Mary Howards Letter by the officious diligence of a Post-Master, was rather a service than a disadvantage to his Majesty, since thereby his coming to England, which might have exposed his Person to inevitable Peril, was prevented. Notice of this discovery could not be soon enough dispersed to prevent the appearance of many Gentlemen in divers parts. The Earl of Lichfield, with Sir Adam Brown, my Lord Mordant, (so we now stile him, in regard he here first declared his having received the Dignity of Viscount) and about twenty five others Rendezvouzed near Guilford in Surrey, but by reason of the taking of Sir Francis Vincent an active Servant of the Kings, there was so little appearance, that all divided to shift for themselves: The Earl of Lichfield and my Lord Mordant came disguised by Water in the Common Barge from Chertsey to London, and got privately to Alderman Robinson's house, where they were for a while concealed.

Sir George Booth appears with several others in a considerable Body.

The most considerable Body that got together was under Sir George Booth, who with the Earl of Derby, the Lord Killmurry, and Major General Egerton were met at the time appointed at Warrington, at first with a small Party; but they having the very Flower of the Gentry and Gallantry ingaged among them, their numbers encreased every minute: Colonel Roger Whitley delivered his Message to Sir George from his Majesty, and the Declarations he had received from the Lord Mordant, with an Account of his Majesties Preparations beyond the Seas, and his readiness to come over upon the first notice; which was no small Satisfaction and Joy to the whole Party, which then consisted of about Five hundred men. The first thing they resolved, was to march towards Chester, and the first night they marched to a place called Tradsam, where they met Colonel Werden, who assured them, that the Gates of Chester would be opened to them: And the next day they marched thither, and took possession of the Town, but the Castle was defended against them by Croxton the Governour thereof for the Parliament, who had one Company it it. The next day Major General Egerton was sent with a Party to Chirk-Castle, where Sir Thomas Middleton hearing of his approach, opened the Gates, and joyfully received him. The next day he went with them to Wrexam, (having left his Son to Command the Castle for the King) and there many came in to them. The next day after, Colonel Whitley was sent with a Party to put a Garrison into Harding Castle in Flintshire, which was newly left by a Party of the Parliament Souldiers that marched from thence to Denbigh Castle their next Garrison, but were seized by the Country, and brought prisoners to Sir George Booth's Party. Colonel Ireland at the same time declared for them in Leverpool, and Mr Brooks, one of the present Members of the House of Commons, willing to expiate his former mistakes, cordially joyned with them for the Freedom of his Country, and met at the first Rendervouz.

Chirk-castle delivered to them by Sir Thomas Middleton.

Col. Ireland and several others declare for them.

The Parliament somewhat apprehensive of these proceedings, caused all the Horses in and about London to be seized, and all the Avenues to the City to be guarded, and divers Troops and Companies to be placed in all the Waies toward the West and North-west Parts. They had every hour news of the dispersing of several little Parties, and Lambert was ordered with a Brigade to march to suppress Sir George Booth and his Party. The Lord Mordant as the most active Agent for his Majesty was summoned on a great penalty to appear; and Mr. Edmund Dunch and Brooks, two Members of the House whom they suspected to be ingaged for the King, were on the penalty of a hundred pounds a piece required to attend the service of the House.

They at Westminster prepare for Defence, and send Lambert against Sir George Booth.

Mr. Nicholas Monk, a Reverend Minister, a Person of most firm Loyalty to his Majesty, and the only Brother to General Monk, came at this time to London in his way to Scotland, from Sir Hugh Pollard, Sir Thomas Stukely, and others of his Majesties Friends in the West of England.

Mr. Monk a Minister sent into Scotland, to solicit his Brother the General to the imbracing his Majesties Interest.

England. His buſineſs was to ingage his Brother in his Majeſties Cauſe to promote the preſent Deſign, being directed to receive further Inſtructions from Sir John Greenvil. He came directly to Mr. Clarges before he ſaw any one, and communicated his buſineſs to him, and afterwards to Greenvill, who much encouraged his undertaking, and ſhewed him two Letters he had received from his Majeſty, one to General Monk, and the other to himſelf; which may not be impertinent to this Hiſtory to be here inſerted, to manifeſt the great Vigilance of his Majeſty, whoſe eye was in every place where he had any proſpect of aſſiſtance to his Affairs. That to Monk was as followeth:

SIR,

His Majeſties Letters to General Monk, and Sir John Greenvill.

I Cannot think you wiſh me ill, for you have no reaſon to do ſo; and the good I expect from you, will bring ſo great a benefit to your Country, and to your ſelf, that I cannot think you will decline my Intereſt. The Perſon who gives or ſends this to you, hath Authority to ſay much to you from me; and if you once reſolve to take my Intereſt to heart, I will leave the way and manner of declaring it intirely to your own Judgment; And will comply with the Advice you ſhall give me. The reſt I refer to the perſon who conveys this to you; and it is in your power to make me as kind to you, as you can deſire, and to have me always

Your affectionate Friend,

*July.*21. 1659. CHARLES R.

The other was to Sir John Greenvill of the ſame date, in theſe words; Viz.

His Majeſties Letter to Sir John Greenvill.

I Am confident that George Monk can have no Malice in his Heart againſt Me; nor hath he done any thing againſt Me which I cannot eaſily pardon; and it is in his power to do Me ſo great Service, that I cannot eaſily Reward, but I will do all I can; and I do Authorize you to Treat with him, and not only to aſſure him of my Kindneſs, but that I will very liberally Reward him with ſuch an Eſtate in Land, and ſuch a Title of Honour as himſelf ſhall deſire, if he will declare for me, and adhere to my Intereſt: And whatſoever you ſhall promiſe to him on my behalf, or whatever he, or you by his Advice, ſhall promiſe to any of his Officers, or the Army under his Command (which Command he ſhall ſtill keep) I will make good and perform upon the Word of a King.

CHARLES R.

Mr. Monk Negotiates with M. Clarges about the foreſaid buſineſs.

Greenvill earneſtly preſſed to have Clarges ingaged, and Mr. Monk moved it to him, with a promiſe of great advantage from his Majeſty upon his Reſtitution. Clarges replied, That he needed not theſe temptations to oblige him to his Duty; and refuſed to have any Diſcourſe concerning thoſe Matters with Sir John Greenvill at that time, well knowing, that the leaſt jealouſie of his actions from thoſe in power, might make him uſeleſs for that future Service which could not be done without him.

Clarges ſecretly conveys M. Monk on Shipboard for his Tranſportation into Scotland.

But becauſe all the Ways to Scotland were obſtructed, he took care to provide a Frigot for the Tranſporting of Mr. Nicholas Monk thither, and convey'd him ſafe on Shipboard, fully inſtructed how to manage his Negotiations with Caution, and to communicate with none but the General, except Dr. Samuel Barrow Phyſician to the Army, a very diſcreet Gentleman, and Mr. John Price his Chaplain: The firſt of which was ejected out of Trinity Colledge in Cambridge, for his affection to his Majeſty; and the latter, the Son of a Sequeſtred Miniſter, alwaies educated in Principles of Loyalty, a good Scholar, and an honeſt Man; both recommended by Clarges to the General at his firſt going into Scotland, to be near his Perſon.

His Majeſty removes privately from Calais to Rouen.

The King when he received the News from the Lord Mordant of the diſappointment of the Deſign, went from Calais to Bulloign, and from thence by eaſie Journeys, and very privately, to Rouen. The Duke of York and Captain Titus ſtayed behind a while at Bulloign, and the Parts adjacent, to be ready upon all occaſions if any thing ſhould intervene. His Majeſty at Rouen was in Conſultation which way to move, when Dr. Alleſtry came to him with the News of Sir George Booth's being in Arms, with Sir Thomas Middleton, and others with great Forces in Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, and North-Wales, which put him in good hopes of Succeſs. The firſt Rumour of this Riſing repreſented it very formidable, foraſmuch as his Majeſties Friends that lived at diſtance from it, were willing to receive it with the greateſt advantage, ſo that the Numbers were believed to be much greater than they were, and by imagination advanced to what the willing Affections of the favourers of his Majeſties Cauſe would have them. His Majeſty ſent the Marqueſs of Ormond to Paris to Tranſact ſome Affairs there, and went himſelf to St. Maloes by Caen, where he met the Earl of Briſtoll, and Mr. Oneal.

Thence to St. Maloes.

They at Weſtminſter in the mean time were very active in diſpatching Lambert on the Expedition againſt Booth, but firſt they iſſue forth a Proclamation to proclaim Major General Egerton, Colonel Robert Werden, Sir George Booth, Sir Thomas Middleton, and their adherents Traytors and Rebels, which was Commanded to be proclaimed in all Market Towns, and read in all Churches.

Major General Maſſey was very active in Glouceſterſhire, and if by an accident of the interception of a Letter his Deſign had not been ruin'd, he had certainly taken Glouceſter; and what with his own reputation in theſe Parts, and the aſſiſtance of the Lord Herbert of Major General Maſſey, the Lord Herbert, and others ſtir for the King in Glouceſterſhire.

Worceſter,

Worceſter, Colonel Barrow, Captain Glaynford, and others of the Kings Friends, they would have got together above three thouſand men, Miners and others, out of the Foreſt of Dean, and from about Stroud-Water, and other places. There was in Glouceſter a Troop of the Army Horſe under one Dale, and a Militia Troop commanded by one Crofts, who upon this Diſcovery cauſed three hundred Foot to be preſently raiſed, and ſent a Party of Horſe to take the Lord Herbert, Maſſey, Barrow, and Glaynford: They took the Lord Herbert and brought him to Glouceſter; Barrow and Glaynford defended themſelves in Barrow's Houſe, and upon Parol, to render themſelves at Glouceſter, were not taken. Maſſey and his Servant being taken Priſoners, Maſſey himſelf was ſet on a Horſe, and a good ſtout Trooper ſet behind him, to hold him in his Arms, two rode on each ſide, and ſome Troopers before his Horſe, and others behind: It was about the cloſe of the Night, the Evening very dark and Tempeſtuous with Rain and Hail, inſomuch, that when they were going down a very ſteep Hill by Nimpſfield-Road, about ten miles from Glouceſter, the way to Bath, Maſſey's Horſe, with the man that rode behind him, fell headlong altogether, and tumbled down that ſteep Hill, whereby it hapned that the Fellow let go his hold, and moſt of the reſt alſo; ſo that all the Priſoners, except the Lord Herbert, and Maſſey's Servant, eſcaped.

The Lord Herbert taken.

And Major Gen. Maſſey.

Maſſey eſcapes, together with ſeveral other priſoners.

The Parliament ſent to Dunkirk for three Regiments to ſtrengthen the Army; and Colonel Zanchy brought out of Ireland his Regiment of Horſe, and Axtel's Regiment of Foot, which landing at Angleſey, marched to joyn with Lambert, who at his firſt march from London, had not above 1500. but by Conjunction of ſeveral Troops and Companies that met him, encreaſed to about 5000 before he ingaged; Sir George Booth had not half the number, and thoſe he had were without any Order or Diſcipline, becauſe many of them, being Noblemen and Gentlemen of Quality, were not without great Emulation, every one aſpiring to Command, whilſt no body obeyed; Sir George Booth having intelligence of Lamberts drawing near to him, thought to have got a days march before him into Lancaſhire, to have increaſed his Numbers; and to gain time, he and Sir Thomas Middleton ſent a Trumpeter, with two Miniſters, to ſhew the ground of their raiſing an Army, and deſired a Treaty, to ſave effuſion of bloud: To which Lambert agreed, on condition they would firſt lay down their Arms, and ſurrender to him the Garriſons in their power. To this there was no Reply; but ſome of Lambert's men preſſed ſo hard the next morning upon Booth, that at a Bridge near Northwich, a ſharp Encounter was made between the Forces of each Party. The Boothians, with much courage, defended the Paſs, till they were overpowred by Numbers. Captain Morris, a gallant Loyal Gentleman, was killed, and ſome few others of Booth's Party; of Lambert's very few fell, and thoſe that did of no great Note; all the vanquiſhed diſperſed themſelves, Sir George Booth and Sir Thomas Middleton got away. The Lord Kilmurry, Brooks, Major General Egerton, Sir William Oneale, and others, were taken priſoners, and all the Garriſons immediately ſubmitted to Lambert.

Sir George Booth's Forces ingage with Lambert.

Sir George defeated.

Sir George, although he had the good Fortune at that time to eſcape, was not long free, being ſeized at Newport-Pannel in a Diſguiſe, as he was riding towards London, in order to his Tranſportation into ſome Foreign Part.

Taken priſoner at Newport-Pannel.

The Curious that made Remarques on this generous Undertaking, as commonly wiſer in the Diſcourſe than Execution of any great Deſign, did much cenſure the Conduct of it. They ſaid, that they had many Opportunities to have ruined their Enemies, but omitted all; That Colonel Zanchy, from Ireland landing in Angleſey, might have been met, and with good probability of Succeſs fought with ere he could have joyn'd with Lambert, they being with all their Force betwixt him and them; and that Colonel Lilburn, who was gathering men together in York-ſhire, might eaſily, by any ſmall Force from Lancaſhire, have been broken, and hindered in his Levies; and that many other little Parties, which in ſmall numbers came from ſeveral Parts, might have been met and diſperſed, before they united; and that one Blow given to any one of them, would have added ſo much to their Reputation, that it might have brought great Acceſſions to their Party. Others (and perhaps with good reaſon) were of Opinion, that nothing was more Deſtructive to his Majeſty, than theſe Plots and Contrivances of Riſing for him; and that the beſt Reſolution he could have taken, ſince the end of the firſt War, was to have ſate in Expectation of ſome favourable Advantage to himſelf from the Diviſion of his Enemies; for what could new raiſed men do againſt experienced and ſucceſsful Souldiers? And where the late King with all his ſtrength could not prevail, Parties could leſs expect to conquer; and indeed, the Event manifeſted the Truth of this Reaſoning, for the Conſequence of theſe Plots, was no other than the Ruine of many of the Eſtates of Noblemen and Gentlemen, the loſs of ſome of their Lives, and the Depreſſion of the Spirits of the reſt; beſides, an occaſion of ſtrengthning the Army ſo much the more, and giving their Party plauſible Pretenſes, to infer a Neceſſity for their continuance, and to Levy Taxes on the People for their Maintenance, and unite and fix them the more againſt his Majeſty. But nevertheleſs, the generoſity of theſe noble Perſons (to particularize any of them in a more eminent manner than the reſt would be to injure all) cannot be enough commended, ſince they valued no hazard, in reſpect of their Duty to their Sovereign, and the Vindication of the Laws and Liberty of their Country, and have left ſuch an Example of Loyalty to their Poſterity, as we hope will be maintained, as long as the Fame of their Vertues and Honour ſhall endure.

The Management of this Riſing cenſured by many.

General Monk in Scotland, was ſo much prevailed upon, by the report of Sir George Booth's proſperous Succeſs in his Enterprize, and the Importunity of his Brother Nicholas Monk, that he reſolved to march into England, in purſu-ance of Booth's Declaration, which was very ſuitable to his own Inclinations.

He conſulted in this Matter, beſides his Brother, only Major Ralph Knight, Major of his own Regiment of Horſe, Captain Jeremiah Smith likewiſe of his own Regiment, Dr. Samuel Barrow Phyſician to the Army, Dr. John Price his Chaplain, and Dr. Thomas Gumble then Chaplain to the Council of Scotland, in regard he had many Seditious Officers in his Army, who were Spies upon all his Actings, and therefore was obliged to be very wary and circumſpect in his Proceedings; inſomuch, that when Colonel Atkins, a Royaliſt of his antient Acquaintance, came into Scotland to him, about the ſame Errand that his Brother did, Monk (for fear of awakening the Jealouſie of the Factious about him) durſt not ſhew him any Countenance or Reſpect, but rather the contrary, ſending him away ſomewhat diſcouraged: When all was ready for his March, and a Declaration to that end prepared, he demurred for two days, upon the ſtop of the Engliſh Packet, in expectation of Intelligence from his Agent Clarges, from whom he two days after received the fatal News of the Defeat of Sir George Booth.

Is diverted by the News of his Defeat.

The King receives news thereof at St. Maloes.

The King, being ſtill at St. Maloes in preparation of a Veſſel to tranſport him into England, had the firſt Notice of theſe Misfortunes from Mr. Brett, an Engliſh Benedictine Monck, which in a while after was confirmed to him by the Marqueſs of Ormond, who came to him from Paris, with Particulars of it: The King (always preſent to himſelf in the moſt difficult Accidents of his Life) diſcovered not much alteration at this, though it ſeemed a Croſs that might very well no leſs ſenſibly affect him, than what ever had yet hapned to him improſperous, and giving Check to his Fortune; becauſe hereby all his hopes became deſperate, of his being ever reſtored to his Subjects, without ſuch Foreign Force, as ſhould be able to afford Aſſiſtance and Supply to their Endeavours for him, by holding his Enemies ſo long in Play, till by acceſſion of his Friends, they might be ſtrong enough to reſiſt their greateſt Power and Force: yet even in this Reflection, he had many Doubts in his Mind, for that many late Succeſſes of the Engliſh in Flanders, had made them ſeem invincible to to thoſe, from whom his Majeſty was to expect Aſſiſtance. But ſince nothing now but Foreign Aid could viſibly raiſe his Hopes, he reſolved ſeriouſly to apply himſelf to the Treaty now in Agitation upon the Borders between France and Spain, about a Peace betwixt thoſe two Crowns, which was managed by Cardinal Mazarini, and Don Lewis d' Haro, the two chief Miniſters of the two Kings; to which his Majeſty had an Eye long ſince, not doubting but he ſhould be in ſome meaſure comprehended in it, ſo as to receive Aſſiſtance from thoſe Princes his Allies, as ſoon as they ſhould be freed from their Embaraſments; and in proſecution hereof, he had commanded Sir Henry Bennet, a Perſon of great Prudence and Addreſs, his Embaſſadour Reſident in Spain, not to fail to attend Don Lewis d' Haro to the Treaty, and be preſent there to negotiate his Affairs. The Treaty being near Concluſion, his Majeſty, for fear it ſhould be ended before he came thither, made all poſſible haſt to repair to thoſe Parts; and in order thereunto, took his Journey forthwith from St. Maloes to Reimes, where he met Sir George Carteret, and after ſome ſmall ſtay with him, went from thence to Nauntz, and there his Company divided, till they met again at Thoulouze; from thence he went by the Paſſage of Oleron, over the Pyrenean Hills, to Saragoſa, the chief City in Aragon, and there he continued eight or nine days, and diſpatched Mr. Oneale to Fontarabia, to inform himſelf of what paſſed at the Treaty; who, when he came thither, after ſome Conference with Bennet, they agreed to haſt away Mr. William Dungan, an Iriſh Gentleman, to the King, to let him know, the Treaty was prolonged, and that his Preſence would very much quicken and advance his Affairs. His Majeſty then immediately haſting by Poſt to the Treaty, continued incognito (as he had done all this Journey) till he came within three Leagues of Fontarabia, where he was attended by Bennet with Coaches, to augment his Equipage; and from thence he reſumed his State, and went in Publick.

He begins to derive his chiefeſt hopes from the peace between France and Spain.

Sir Henry Bennet Negotiates for his Majeſty at that Treaty.

He was met by the Baron of Batteville, a Perſon of great Honour and Civility (Governour of Fontarabia) with a Troop of Horſe, a mile and a half without the Town; and when he came near it, all the Guns were diſcharged, and Don Lewis himſelf met him within the Gate. During his ſtay there, he was entertained in as ſplendid a manner as the time and place would handſomely admit. And during the Treaty, he had frequent Conferences with Don Lewis d' Haro, and was every day viſited by him.

And is Honourably entertained by the Spaniard.

The Governing Power in England imployed at the ſame time to attend on Cardinal Mazarini at this Treaty, and to promote their Concerns, Lockart, who had continued ever ſince Oliver's Death Extraordinary Embaſſadour in France. The Cardinal lay at St. John de Luz, the neareſt Town to Spain, on the French Borders, where he ſhewed ſo much Countenance and Reſpect to Lockart, that the King thought it not decent to give him a Viſit; but he received many from divers of the French Nobility.

Lockart at the ſame time Agent at this Treaty for the Engliſh Common-wealth

Is countenanced and favoured by Cardinal Mazarini.

Ceneral Monk was inwardly very much troubled at theſe Diſaſters; and the more, becauſe he found himſelf every day more and more incapable to remedy them: for the Houſe diſplaced Colonel Daniel, the Governour of St. Johnſton, and many other Officers whom he much truſted, and were about to remove the reſt: ſo that ſeeing which way things were likely to tend, and thinking it better to reſign of his own accord, than to be worm'd out of his Command, or at leaſt remain but like the Image of a General, and ſerve only for a property to other Mens Deſigns, he ſent a Letter upon the Third of September, to Lenthal the Speaker, to be communicated to the Parliament, to deſire a Diſmiſſion from his Command; pretending, That he was infirm in his Health, and had long continued in that remote Country; And therefore requeſting, now that all Inſurrections,

Gen. Monk ſends a Letter to the Houſe, ſignifying his willingneſs to be diſmiſt from his Command.

Insurrections, which threatned Disturbances to the Peace of the Nations, were allayed, he might be permitted to return into his own Country, to end his days in quiet.

This Letter, though it was not sent to Clarges to be delivered, as usually all his Packets were, because he suspected he would have opposed that Resolution of his, and been very backward and dilatory in the delivery of the Letter; yet Mr. Nicholas Monk giving him Intimation of it, and the Matter was so ordered, that the Letter came to his hands, and by him delivered to the Speaker, with whom he dealt so effectually, that he agreed to delay the offering it to be read for ten days, till a Packet came from Scotland to contradict it: Yet Clarges was put to great perplexity in this Business, for Vane, Salway, and those that affected not, or suspected the General (having private Advice of this Letter) often call'd to have it read; And had not earnest and dextrous prevention been used to divert the House with other Business, by some that loved the General well, and were prepared by Clarges, he had by this Despondency rendred himself incapable of doing that, for which he seem'd by Providence especially chosen and markt out.

The said Letter, through Clarges his perswasion, is kept off by the Speaker from being read.

The Army begin to contrive the recovery and advancement of their Power.

The Defeat of Sir George Booth and his Party, heightned much the Spirits of the chief Officers of the Army, who began now to contrive how to restore the Military Power to its former Greatness, which was somewhat of late lessened by the Parliament, and in Designation to be wholly subjected to them. To effect this, there was a strict and private Correspondence held between some of the Officers at London, and Lambert, and those with him in Lancashire, Cheshire, and Parts adjacent. The Difficulty was, how to ingage the inferiour Officers (who were somewhat affected with their immediate Dependence on the House, by receiving Commissions from the Hands of the Speaker) to obviate this. It was advised, to attempt nothing at the General-Council of Officers in London: but to begin with those of Lamberts Brigade, as most exalted by their late good Fortune, and therefore apter to be seduced by any plausible Advantages of Power. These therefore were all conven'd, to the number of Fifty, at Derby, the 16th of September. The first thing on which they began their Debate, was the Constitution of the Army; the Unity, Discipline, and Conduct whereof, they said was invaded by a Party of Neuters and Malignants: They complained of several Miscarriages in the Civil Administrations of Government, and of the Inactivity and Backwardness of Persons in Authority and Trust in the Counties, and the Defection of many Corporations, both which appeared in the time of the late Insurrection. They also seemed much to resent the Parliaments unwillingness to prosecute the Proposals of the Army at their first sitting, as an Expedient for Settlement, with many other things of like Concernment. These things were artificially insinuated into the Minds of the inferiour Officers, who were easily enough drawn to an Opinion of their own Power, and to think themselves qualified to give Laws to all but themselves.

Consultations among the Officers of the Army, promoted by Lambert, in dislike of some miscarriages of the Junto.

However, these Matters were at first only Treated of in Generals, It being moved and agreed, that Colonel Zanchy, Colonel Michel, Major Creed, and some few others, should meet as Committees for the rest, to reduce them into Form, which was accordingly done. Lambert himself went privately to London, and Lieutenant-Colonel Duckenfield, a great Creature of his, presently followed, to acquaint the General Council of Officers with these Proceedings; and shortly after the whole Matter being Digested into the Form of a Petition, was sent up in a Letter inclosed to Colonel Ashfield, Colonel Cobbet, and Duckenfield; by whom, or any one, or more of them, it was to be delivered to Fleetwood, to be communicated to the General Council of Officers: And at the same time, when this was sent to London, an Officer was dispatched with a Duplicate of it to General Monk, and a Letter with it, to desire his Concurrence, and that the Officers of his Army might joyn with them: which Letter was subscribed by fourteen of the chief Officers imployed under Lambert.

Their Desires concluded to be drawn up into the Form of a Petition.

Sir Arthur Hasterig had secret Intimation of these Consultations at Derby; and the next day after the Petition came to London, which was on the 22 of September, he moved the Parliament, at their first Sitting, against it, exclaiming with much earnestness against the Officers of the Army, who (he said) were attempting alterations in the Government, to the setting up a Single Person over them.

Hasterig vehemently oppoſeth the Armies proceedings.

This put the House into a Jealousie of Lambert; to whom, in their private Discourses, they attributed the whole Contrivance; and though he outwardly appeared passive in it, they said he aspired to succeed Cromwel: And because it was not yet time to effect his purpose in his own Person, he would set up Fleetwood to be General of the Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and establish himself in the next Command to him, to be thereby able, with less Envy, to compass his Ends. For Fleetwood, they said, was of an easie nature, and would be contented with the Name of General, allowing Lambert the Power of it, till he should find a fair Occasion, to assume it in his own Right; and when he should have so gotten the Sword, he would not long want the Scepter.

And possesseth the House against them. The Junto's Censure of Lambert, in reference to this Business.

Fleetwood confessed he had the Copy of a Petition, but seemed much perplexed at Hasterigs laying such an Imputation on the Officers of the Army, and endeavoured to justifie their Innocence, as intending nothing less than what was alledged; but all he said could not allay the heat raised by Hasterig, insomuch, that they Ordered, That Ashfield, Cobbet, and Duckenfield, whom he affirmed to have the Original in their hands, should that afternoon attend the House with it, and appointed Fleetwood to give them notice thereof, and to bring with him the Copy he had. Monk made no Progress in Scotland in this Affair, nor did he think fit to call together his Officers about it; but some of them that were Anabaptists attempted privately to get Subscriptions, till they heard of the severe Reflection that was made upon it by the House: Whom in the Afternoon, Fleetwood endeavours to justifie the Officers of the Army, but in vain.

Aſtfield, Cobbet, and Duckenfield attend upon the Houſe with this Petition.

noon, the three Officers mentioned attended with their Petition: And becauſe it was That, on which the chief Foundation was laid of that difference betwixt the Remnant Parliament and Army, which Ended in the Diſſolution of both, and was never yet Printed, We have thought it material enough to be here word for word inſerted.

The Humble Petition and Propoſals of the Officers under the Command of the Right Honourable the Lord Lambert in the late Northern Expedition.

HUMBLY SHEWETH,

The Tenour of the Armies Petition and Propoſals.

THat whereas we, with others who deſire to fear the Lord in thoſe Nations (though by our provocation we were ripe for deſtruction) have been again ſaved by the Lord, and have had a late view of his appearance as of old; in the beholding of whoſe gracious Footſteps, as we cannot but rejoyce, ſo our ſelves tremble, leſt the fruit of all (which the Lord may expect, and his People long earneſtly for) become abortive now in the day of our deliverance: We therefore preſent unto your Honours Conſideration theſe enſuing Propoſals, which we humbly lay before you:

1. That the Humble Petition and Addreſs of the General Council of Officers at Walling-ford-Houſe to the Parliament, which was ſo unanimouſly and chearfully agreed to, and approved of, in a day of our greateſt Confuſions, may not be laid aſleep, but may have freſh life given unto it; It being upon farther and clearer grounds ſtill upon our hearts, as the beſt and only Expedient yet offered (notwithſtanding many Eſſayes) to a happy and durable Settlement, being a fixed and firm Fence and Boundary (under God) for the ſecuring the Civil and Spiritual Liberties which the Spirit of the Nation is unwearied in travel, not only to invade, but upon every opportunity (as We have often ſeen, and lately had a clear evidence of) is ready to attempt the ruine and deſtruction of the ſame.

2. That whereas God having given a ſpirit to the Army fixed and faithful to the Intereſt of his People, and Our good Cauſe; when many who had been Friends were either Apoſtates, Malignants, or Neuters, joyning with the old Enemy, leaving the Parliament and Army, and their few active Friends ſingly to conflict with their late difficulties; And having now no ſuch hopeful way like to prevail to ruine and fruſtrate what we have ſo long Conteſted for, as by working Diviſions in the Army, making breaches, begetting miſ-underſtandings, and diſſolve its Unity, wherein, under God, its greateſt ſtrength lies: We do therefore, as the moſt effectual means for the maintaining the Diſcipline and Conduct thereof, and preſerving its Unity inviolable, Humbly Propoſe, That his Excellency the Lord Fleetwood may be ſettled Commander in Chief of the Armies (his Commiſſion expiring within a few Months;) that the Lord Lambert be the General Officer and Chief Commander of the Army next, and under him; And alſo, that the Lord Desborow be the chief Officer of the Horſe under them: And that General Monk be the Chief Officer and Commander of the Infantry: They being all Perſons under whoſe Conduct, Courage, and Fidelity, We have had Eminent Succeſs, Victory, and Deliverance, in the days of greateſt Straights, and have been ſignally bleſſed and owned by the Lord; to Whom, and not to Man, be the Honour of all.

3. That having had very ſad experience of a grand Apoſtatizing ſpirit gone through the Nations, and amongſt many of thoſe who were intruſted for the Safety thereof, very few acting or appearing in ſeveral Counties, for the preventing the Plots, and ſuppreſſing the power of the Enemy in the late Rebellious Deſign, and many others not only flattering, but falling in with them, whereby a totall ruine was threatned, and had been effected, had not the Lord in Mercy prevented: We therefore humbly Propoſe, That there may be a diligent enquiry in all parts, by faithful men imployed to that purpoſe, what intruſted perſons have been guilty of any Contrivance, and acted againſt the Common-wealth-Intereſt, and that they may be proceeded againſt accordingly. And likewiſe what perſons upon wicked purpoſes have been Neutral in ſuch a diſtracted day, when their Aſſiſtance, according to their Imployments and Truſts, would have been not leſs uſeful than ſeaſonable; and that all ſuch may be removed from their Places and Imployment, Civil and Military; and that ſuch who on the contrary in this Juncture of the diſcompoſed Affairs, declared their owning of this Intereſt, either in the County Troops, or Militia Volunteers, or otherwiſe, may be looked on as Friends, encouraged, ſatisfied their Arrears, protected from Injuries, countenanced by you, and as they are capacitated, inveſted with Authority in their ſeveral Countries.

4. That in the late Inſurrections, ſome conſiderable Corporations have not only aided, abetted, and countenanced the Enemies Deſign, but have alſo made uſe of the Arms lodged with them, and themſelves appeared in the Rebellion, willingly receiving the numerous acceſſion of all engaged therein: Therefore We humbly Propoſe, That ſuch Corporations may be diſcountenanced, and that You would be pleaſed to give Your Signal mark of diſfavour againſt them; As alſo for the future, ſo to regulate Corporations, That ſuch perſons well Qualified according to the Government of a well Conſtituted Common-wealth may be intruſted with Authority of Magiſtracy in every of the ſeveral Towns; That ſo the Footſteps of Monarchy may be rooted out.

5. We humbly offer, That all Perſons whatſoever, Magiſtrates, Miniſters, or others, who have openly or ſecretly ſtirred up or provoked the Inhabitants of theſe Nations to War and Commotions againſt the Parliament, and particularly to the late Inſurrections, (of which is viſibly apparent, many of them have not only been abettors, but in their perſons appeared with Inſtruments and Weapons of War, as ſome of Us know) may be proceeded againſt, as You in your Judgment ſhall think fit.

The House signifie their displeasure, and vote against the effect of the Petition.

After the reading of this Paper, the House adjourned till the next Morning, and Ordered then to resume the Debate of it, and that no other business should intervene; And at their meeting, they Voted, That to have any more General Officers in the Army, than are already settled by the Parliament, is needless, chargeable, and dangerous to the Common-wealth; and that Fleetwood shall acquaint them with this Resolve.

They had it under Consideration, to have imprisoned those that brought the Petition; but because the chief and most remarkable design of it tended to set up some new General Officers in the Army, they thought it enough to declare against it.

Fleetwood the next day, at a Meeting with many of the Leading Officers at his own House, informed them of the Parliaments displeasure signified in their late declarative Vote against the Petition and Proposals, and they thereupon resolved to decline the insisting thereon; but agreed, that some of their number should draw up somewhat in Writing of a more moderate nature, to be presented to the House, to profess an adherence to their Authority, in opposition to the King and his Party, (whom they styled, The Common Enemy) and that they would stand by them in the Settlement of the Common-wealth against all Disturbances whatsoever: And that this should be prepared and brought to be read and considered by a General Council of Officers to meet for that purpose the 27th of September, in the Chappel at Somerset-House.

The Officers resolve upon more moderate Proposals.

Another Petition brought into the Council of Officers more high than the former.

And the said Petition was at the appointed time prepared and brought into the General Council by those to whom the care of framing it was committed, with a long Preamble, and many Proposals far different from what was expected by many that were then present; for there seemed at their former meeting, to be a general sense and opinion, that they should humble themselves for what they had before done without the permission and consent of their Masters, and make some Declaration of their intention, never to interpose more in matters of Government. But contrary to this, they arraigned them for what they had done against the Petition of Lamberts Brigade, and for what (they said) had been groundlesly and without cause alledged against them; and were so far from acknowledging their offences, thereby to recover the good opinion of the House towards them, that they justified their own Proceedings with a kind of Reprehension of those that misinformed the House concerning it. Colonel Okey, Colonel Hacker, Colonel Sanders, Major Daberon, Major Barton, and Major Breman, with many others, did much oppose the carrying on of this Representation, which retarded the Progress of it. And some of the dissenting Officers writ to General Monk, and sent him a Copy of what was brought in, with all the debates thereupon, desiring him to imploy his Credit with Fleetwood and Lambert, to put a stop to it; as that which would, if not prevented, put an irreparable breach betwixt the Parliament and the Army.

Monk writes his sense of it in a Letter to Fleetwood.

Monk was somewhat at a stand to know how to behave himself in this matter, but to avoid suspicion, he writ to Fleetwood a curteous Letter of his opinion of the whole Affair, but insisted chiefly on that part of the Petition wherein it was proposed, That no Officer or Souldier should be cashiered or dismissed from their Places, without a due proceeding at a Court-Martial, or by his own consent, except in case of reducement or disbanding; desiring they would add (after the words, Court-Martial) or by order of the Commander in Chief of the Army upon the place, alledging, That although the removing or displacing of Officers or Souldiers, otherwise than by sentence of Court-Martial, was a thing rarely practised: yet if a General, or the Supreme Authority, should be understood to be restrained therein, it might encourage the more inferiour Officers and Souldiers to affront the Superiour, and the General himself, and would in time make the Army a kind of separate Corporation from the Parliament.

Monk offers himself to march in to the assistance of the Parliaments Party.

This Letter came not to Fleetwood, till the greater part of the Officers had agreed to the Representation to be presented to the House. But Monks intention was to make his advantage of this division, and to that end, sent his Brother Nicholas to London to Clarges, to authorize him principally to acquaint such of the Members, as he thought most fit, That if they would assert their own Authority, he would march into England, to justifie it against any opposition.

During this Debate at London of the General Officers, all imaginable endeavours were used by the dissenters, to protract and lengthen the time; but they were by much over-numbred. And the Petition was Signed by 230. Commission-Officers of the Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland, who were then in and about London.

Orders made by the Junto of Commons, for the incouragement of the Souldiers, the better to ingage them to their Interest.

The leading Members had from time to time notice of the Progress of this Petition, and the matter of it, so that to prevent the Officers of the Army, even in the most reasonable of their Demands, They made many Orders concerning Pay of the Souldiers, and Mariners, and Provision for the Maimed Souldiers, and Orphans, and Widows of such as were killed in their Service. To the Souldiers they Ordered, That all the Arrears, as well of those of the Army, as the Militia Troops and Companies, should be paid out of the Moiety of such Monies as should be raised by the Sale, or other disposition of the Estates of Delinquents Sequestred, and to be Sequestred upon the late Insurrection, and out of one Moiety of Money to be raised by the sale of Forests and Chaces, excepting New Forest, and the Forest of Deane. And excepting such Timber and Trees as should be thought fit to be reserved and made use of, for the use of the Common-wealth. And to the Officers and Mariners of the Navy, They ordered the other Moiety of the Money to be raised upon Delinquents Estates. And also that Hampton-Court House, Parks, and Somerset-House (except the Chappel which was reserved for a French Congregation) and all other Mannors, Parks, Houses, and Lands contained contained in the ſeveral Acts for ſale of the King and Queens Lands, ſhould be ſold, and the Money go to that uſe. And for the maimed Souldiers, Orphans, and Widows, of ſuch as were ſlain in their Service, They ordered the Committees formerly conſtituted for inſpections into the Publick Treaſuries, to pay two months Pay to them, and to take care to put ſuch of their Children to be Apprentices as were fit for it. They likewiſe, to gain themſelves the more general Eſteem, conſidered of ſome way to ſatisfie part of the Debts contracted to raiſe Arms againſt the King, at the beginning of the War, upon the Publick Faith of the Parliament, which had been long neglected; And in order thereunto, They ordered, that the other Moiety of the Money to be raiſed by the ſale of the Foreſts (except as aforeſaid) ſhould be imployed towards the payment and ſatisfaction of thoſe Debts. The Houſe imagined that theſe their proceedings would ſo far ſatisfie the Generality of the Officers of the Army, as to divert them from the delivery of their Petition; and many of the moſt active members in credit with the leading men did what they could to hinder it, but could not prevail. And upon the 5th of October, Colonel Desborow, with many others, came to the door of the Parliament, and ſent the Serjeant to inform the Speaker, that he, with ſome others of the Officers of the Army, attended with ſomething to be preſented to them, whereupon he was called in with thoſe in his Company, and in the name of the reſt, ſpoke theſe following words.

Desborows words at the delivery thereof.

"I Am Ordered by the General Council of "the Army, with the reſt of theſe Gentle- "men, to wait upon you, to preſent unto you "their Humble Repreſentation and Petition; "and they humbly deſire you would accept it, "as that which proceeds from the Hearts of "thoſe who deſire nothing more than that the "Lord would ſtrengthen your hearts, in car- "rying on that good Work of ſettling theſe "Nations upon the Foundation of a free Com- "mon-wealth, whereby the Religious and Ci- "vil Liberty of the good People thereof may "be preſerved and ſecured.

Having ſaid this, he and thoſe with him withdrew, and the Petition, being delivered by the Serjeant at Arms attending into the Speakers hands, was by his direction read. The Title was,

The Humble Repreſentation and Petition of the Officers of the Army, To the Parliament of the Common-wealth of England.

The ſubſtance of the Armies humble Repreſentation and Petition

In the Preamble they ſet forth, "That ha- "ving had by their Order ſome late Votes of "Parliament Communicated unto them by "Lieutenant General Fleetwood their Comman- "der in Chief, occaſioned by a Debate in "Parliament upon the Petition and Propoſals of "the Officers under the Command of the "Lord Lambert in the late Northern Expedi- "tion; They have inquired diligently into "their hearts and ways with reference there- "unto, and finding nothing amongſt them but "Faithfulneſs and Integrity to the Parliament "and Common-wealth, They are ſenſible that "there have not wanted ſome Perſons who "have endeavoured to beget miſ-underſtand- "ing betwixt the Parliament and the Army, "and to that end have repreſented their Acti- "ons and Intentions ſo, as it is taken for gran- "ted, that there hath been irregularity "amongſt them, at which they fear they have "taken offence; Whereas if there had not "been an anticipation, they are perſwaded it "would have appeared to all unprejudiced "ſpirits, that neither they (who for the gene- "rality of them were ignorant (for ſo they "pretended) of that whereat the offence was "taken) nor their faithful Brethren of the "Northern Brigade who ſigned the ſaid Peti- "tion and Propoſals, did deſign or intend any "thing tending to the Interruption of the Par- "liament, the prejudice of the Peace of the "Common-wealth, or any other by or ſini- "ſter reſpect not becoming the Truſt repoſed "in them. Wherefore being ſenſible of the "Evills that perſons abroad may make from "the leaſt apprehenſions of difference betwixt "the Parliament and the Army; and that they "may, as much as in them lies, remove all oc- "caſions of ſurmiſe, juſtifie their own Inno- "cency before them, and fruſtrate the expe- "ctations of any, who by blowing up the "Coals of diſſention, hope to warm them- "ſelves thereby; They have thought it their "Duty to preſent their naked Thoughts to "them, hoping they will find ſo much of In- "tegrity and approved Faithfulneſs in them, "for the welfare of the Common-wealth, as "may continue a firm confidence of them, and "engage their Zeal againſt all ſuch as ſhall go "about to reproach their Faithful Army, or "any member thereof for the future, eſpecially "conſidering that the peace of theſe Nations "depends much upon a Cordial and Affecti- "onate Union of the Parliament and Army, "and an uninterrupted good underſtanding of "each other.

It could not rationally be believed, that theſe men could think this their manner of Proceeding ſutable to the temper of Subjects to their Superiours, or that it could tend to any thing but that which they ſeemed to avoid; namely, a Breach betwixt their Parliament and them: But a clearer manifeſtation of this, was apparent in their Propoſals annexed to this Preamble, uſhered in with Four bold declaratory Aſſertions; of all which we ſhall inſert the words themſelves as they were preſented. Where they ſay,

We do humbly and plainly declare,

The Armies Propoſals.

1. That notwithſtanding what any perſons may ſuggeſt or ſay to the contrary, We are not for, but againſt the ſetting up of any Single Perſon whatſoever in Supreme Authority: And for a demonſtration hereof, We may appeal to your own Judgments, upon our late Actings, wherein ſince our our Declaration of the Sixth of May last, We have with all Industry and Faithfulness endeavoured to render our selves serviceable to you and the Common-wealth, and have chearfully observed your Commands, some of Us with our Lives in our hands in your late Service; wherein to our great encouragement the Lord hath once more appeared to own you and your Army, and the Good Old Cause, for which we have contended. And at the late Return of this Parliament to the discharge of their remaining Trust, We did with simplicity and plainness, in our Humble Petition and Address presented to you, manifest our Hearts and Desires, and that with much unanimity and fulness of consent, which we apprehended was well accepted by you.

2. That we have not since changed our Principles, leading to a well regulated Common-wealth, wherein the Liberties of the People thereof both Spiritual and Civil may be fully secured, and Persons of known Integrity, Piety, and Ability imployed in Places of Trust and Concernment; but resolve by the Assistance of God to remain constant to them: And make it our humble Prayer to God, That he would incline your hearts effectually to prosecute the same, and make you Instrumental in bringing forth such a Foundation of Government, whereby all the good People of these Nations may rationally expect that such Liberties and Rights shall be preserved to them and their Posterities. And We can truly say, That it is in our hearts earnestly to desire, that God would Crown you with the Honour of making these Nations happy by such a Settlement, as may not be liable at every Change of Governours to have the Peace thereof disturbed by introducing new Governments.

3. Whereas a Petition and Proposals were lately drawn up by the Officers of the Brigade, that (under the Command of Major General Lambert) hazarded themselves in your Service with good success, whereby through the blessing of God upon them, and others of your faithful Friends and Servants, the Peace of this Common-wealth is still continued: And the said Petition was sent up to some Officers here, to be presented to the Lord Fleetwood; which hath been by some interpreted to evill and sinister Ends, and from thence suggestions derived, as if there were Intentions to violate the Parliament, to set up a Single Person, or another General: In order thereunto, We do sincerely profess, (whatever the design of any persons may be to promote such Causeless Jealousies) We have had no other than Faithfulness and Candor in our Hearts and Actions towards the Parliament; nor do we apprehend (with submission we may speak it) any reason or cause of offence to be conceived against your Faithful Servants, who lately gave so ample proof of their Fidelity and Courage.

4. We cannot but esteem our selves unhappy, to have been so misrepresented to the Parliament, as should occasion such a publick Admonition upon Record; And considering what Evil use may be made of these things by a Publick Enemy, and to the end they may be disappointed of their hopes, and all such persons discouraged as shall go about for the future to promote Jealousies, or by mis-information to beget Divisions betwixt the Parliament and their Faithful Servants the Army: And that a good understanding may be preserved between them, We humbly Pray,

1. That the Officers of the Army, and particularly those who have reason to bear the marks of Your Favour for their Faithfulness in the late Northern Expedition, may stand right in Your Opinion, and have your Countenance.

2. That whatsoever person or persons shall for the future groundlesly and Causelesly inform the House against your Servants, thereby creating Jealousies, and casting scandalous Imputations upon them, may be brought to Examination, Justice, and Condign Punishment.

3. That it being an undoubted Right of the People to have a Liberty in a peaceable and submissive way, to Petition the Supreme Authority, which Liberty hath been by Your selves Assented, allowed and approved of; We cannot but also assert the said Liberty, and humbly Conceive, that your Faithful Servants of the Army have no way forfeited their Rights as Freemen, and that therefore they hope it will be no offence for them to submit their humble Desires to the Parliament.

4. That You would be pleased to take into Your serious Consideration, the necessitous Condition of the poor Souldiers of Your Armies, and that all possible care may be taken for their timely supply, their Wants being such as earnestly call for it: And that some speedy and effectual Course may be taken to provide for the Maimed Souldiers, and the Poor Widows and Orphans, of such as have been slain in Your Service, that the Blessing of God may be upon You.

5. That such who have freely offered themselves in the several Counties and Cities of these Nations, to own and stand by You and your Cause in the late Insurrections, with the hazard of all which is dear unto them, may have Your Encouragement, and be Imployed in Places of Trust and Command.

6. That it being a thing granted by all, that without due execution of Martial Discipline, the Peace, Union, and good Government of an Army cannot be preserved; the Discipline of the Army may be preserved inviolable, and in particular, That no Officer or Souldier of the Army may be Cashiered or Dismissed from their Places without a due proceeding at a Court-Martial, or by his own Consent, except in cases of Reducement or Disbanding.

7. That it being judged necessary by the Parliament, for the keeping of the Army under such a Conduct as may render the same Serviceable to the Common-wealth, to appoint a Committee of Nominations for the proposing of Officers to the Parliament for their Approbation; We humbly pray, That no Officers may be brought into the Army, but such as shall first come under the Consideration of the said Committee, and be by them presented.

8. The Office of the Commander in Chief of the Army being of so great Concernment to the Peace of this Common-wealth, and his Commission at present (as we conceive) expiring within a few months, We humbly pray, That the Consideration of that matter may come before you, and some such effectual course taken therein, as may prevent our fears, and the hazard of leaving the Army to Confusion.

9. And that you would retain a good Opinion of your Army, and, against all discouragements whatsoever, ſoever, proceed in the carrying on of that good Work intruſted in your hands, for the Glory of God, and advantage of theſe Nations. In the proſecution whereof, through the help of our God, We ſhall be found (notwithſtanding all endeavours to the contrary) faithful to You and this Commonwealth.

The Inſolency of theſe Propoſals, gave our preſent Senatours reaſon to ſuſpect their Authority to be of no long continuance; but in regard many Officers of the Army diſſented from the Repreſenting and Propoſing Party, they imagined the reſt would not be very haſty to make a Rupture: Therefore they reſolved to aſſert their Power at any hazard; in order whereunto, they had many ſharp Debates about this Repreſentation and Petition; but in the end they concluded with moderation, and directed their Speaker to call the Petitioners into the Houſe, and acquaint them, "That the Par"liament had read their Repreſentation and
"Petition, and taking notice of the good Ex-
"preſſions therein of their Affections and "Faithfulneſs to this Parliament and Common"wealth, had Commanded him to give them
"the Thanks of their Houſe for them; and "to let them know, That they had already ta"ken into conſideration the Relief of the Poor
"Widows, Orphans, and maimed Souldiers,
"to whom Penſions had been formerly allow"ed; and had alſo ſettled a way for ſatisfaction
"of the Arrears due to the Officers and Soul-
"diers, and would endeavour to bring the ſame
"to ſpeedy effect.

The Junto diſſemble at firſt their diſtaſte at theſe Proceedings of the Army.

Desborow gives an Accompt of this Anſwer to a General Council of Officers who aſſembled that Afternoon on purpoſe. It was not unknown to them, That the Houſe reſented their Addreſs, & that in ſuch a degree, that it was evident they intended to alter the Conſtitution of the Army. To provide againſt this, they thought fit to ſtrengthen their Party, by getting more Subſcriptions to their Repreſentation and Petition, and immediately they agreed upon the form of a Letter to be ſent to Ireland, and another to Scotland, and to every Regiment in England; for the Signing and diſperſing of which, they nominated from among themſelves a ſelect Number in the nature of a Committee. That to General Monk, was in theſe words:

Right Honourable,

A Letter from a Committee of the council of Officers to General Monk, concerning the Armies Repreſentation.

"WE do by Command from the General
"Council of the Officers of the Army
"now in London, tranſmit the incloſed to you,
"being a true Copy of the Repreſentation and "Petition which was this day by them humbly
"preſented to the Parliament; and the Votes
"of the Houſe paſſed thereupon: And are "further to ſignifie as their Deſire, that the "ſame may be Communicated to all the Com-
"miſſion Officers of that part of the Army
"under your Command, and the Subſcripti-
"ons of all taken to the Repreſentation and Pe- "tition, that are free to Sign the ſame; Which "being ſo ſigned, It is deſired you will be
"pleaſed to cauſe them to be cloſe ſealed up,
"and returned to Thomas Sandford Eſquire,
"Secretary to his Excellency the Lord Fleet-
"wood, who is to give an Accompt thereof. As "we have thus fulfilled the General Councils
"Pleaſure, we are well aſſured you will be "pleaſed to comply with their Requeſt; which "is all at preſent from

Your humble Servants,

J. Lambert, Rich. Creed, John Desborow, John Maſon, William Packer.

The General had intimation of this Letter from Clarges before it came to his hands, with a full Narrative of the Occurrences that paſſed upon the delivery of the Repreſentation; which made him reſolve to admit of no Subſcriptions in Scotland. And when the Letter came to his hands, He returned in Anſwer to it; That he thought it unfit to have any Subſcriptions made to that, to which now the Parliament had given an Anſwer, leſt it ſhould be underſtood to make a Party againſt them. And in purſuance of this Reſolution, he ſent Orders to all the Regiments under his Command, to forbid them to ſubſcribe.

The Subſtance of Gen. Monk's Anſwer.

The Houſe a little before this Agitation, had begun to Court General Monk very much, as thinking it a matter of no ſmall importance, to gain him wholly to them. And he having ſent a Letter to them, (which they received Two days after the delivery of the Repreſentation of the Army) to acquaint them with the peaceable condition of Scotland in obedience to their Government, wherein he moved ſomething in favour of ſome of his Officers, and commended the temper of his Army: They returned him Anſwer the ſame day, with the Thanks of the Houſe, and let him know, The high eſteem they had of the Services which with ſo much Valour, Prudence, and Faithfulneſs he had performed; and that they had granted the deſire of his Letters, with aſſurance to him and his Officers and Souldiers under his Command, of returns of Favour from the Parliament anſwerable to their merit.

He is Courted by the Parliament Party.

And complemented by Letter, with gratulatory expreſſions for his good Service.

Upon the Tenth of the ſaid Month, they took the Propoſals in the Armies Repreſentation into Debate:

To the Firſt, they Anſwer,

"That the Officers of the Army have re"ceived, and ſhall from time to time receive
"marks of the Favour of the Parliament, and "countenance anſwerable to their Merit and "Faithfulneſs.

The Houſe takes into Debate, and anſwers, one by one, the Armies Propoſals.

To the Second they Anſwer,

"That it is the Duty of all Perſons, eſpeci-
"ally the Members of Parliament, to inform "the Houſe of any thing, which in their appre-
"henſion may concern the Publick Safety;
"And it is the undoubted Right of the Par"liament to receive, and debate thoſe Infor-
"mations, and to Reſolve what they think fit
"thereupon.

To

To the Third they Declare,

"That every Member of the Army, as "Freemen of England, have right of Petitioning the Parliament: but withall, think "fit to let them know, That the Petitioners "ought to be very careful, both in the manner, and in the matter which they desire; "That the way of promoting and presenting "the same may be peaceable; and the things "Petitioned for, not tending to the disturbance "of the Common-wealth, nor to the dishonour of the Parliament: And that it is the "Duty of Petitioners to submit their Desires "to the Parliament, and to acquiesce in the "Judgment thereof.

In Answer to the Fourth Proposal.

"They Order Two Months Pay to be "forthwith paid to the Officers and Souldiers "of the Army in England, out of the Six "Months Assessment of Five and thirty thou-"sand pounds a month now due; And that "the Council of State do give Order, that the "same be paid accordingly; And that Two "Months Pay be also issued to the Officers and "Souldiers in Scotland and Ireland. To that "part of the Proposal, To provide for the "Maimed Souldiers, and the poor Widows "and Orphans of such as had been slain in their "Service, They refer the former Votes made "in their behalfs.

To the Fifth Proposal they Answer,

"That such Persons as have been Faithful "and Active for the Parliament in the late In-"surrection, the Parliament will take care to "give them all due encouragement as occasion "shall be offered.

This Resolute Procedure of the Members at Westminster, filled the Army with strange Rumours: And they in the mean time to provide against all Accidents, consulted, If any Breach should be made upon their Government, how to leave them that did it as destitute as might be of Means and Authority to maintain themselves in such actings. And since nothing could more weaken them in such Confusion than want of Money, They for a time deferred their further consideration on the Proposals of the Representation, and made an Act against the raising of Money upon the People without Consent of Parliament, Wherein they Enact,

An Act of the Remnant against raising of Money without Consent of Parliament.

That all Orders, Ordinances, and Acts, made by any Single Person and his Council, or by both or either of them, or otherwise, or by any Assembly or Convention pretending to have Authority of Parliament, from and after the Nineteenth day of April, 1653. and before the Seventh of May, 1659. and which have not been or should not be Enacted, Allowed, and Confirmed by this present Parliament, should be declared, deemed, taken and adjudged to be of no force or effect from and after the said Seventh day of May, 1659. And that no Person or Persons shall after the Eleventh day of October, 1659. Assess, Levy, Collect, Gather, or Receive any Custome, Impost, Excise, Assessment, Contribution, Tax, Tallage, or any Sum or Sums of Money, or other Imposition whatsoever, of this Common-wealth, without their Consent in Parliament, or as by Law might have been done before the Third of November, 1640. And that every person offending contrary to this Act, should be adjudged to be guilty of High Treason, and forfeit and suffer as in case of Treason.

A Letter to Okey, the chief cause of the speedy putting forth of this Act.

That which chiefly provoked them to the hasty making of this Law, was a Letter which had been communicated to them, under the hands of Lambert, Desborow, Berry, Kelsey, Ashfield, Cobbet, Packer, Barrow, and Creed, directed to Colonel Okey. It was much to the same Purport with that sent to General Monk before mentioned, and in the same Form: This Letter was by accident delivered to Okey; for there being many Letters signed, to be sent to the several Regiments, which were left to be disposed of by Fleetwoods Secretary, he, amongst others, directed one to Okey; who, as soon as he had it, shewed it to Sir Arthur Haslerig, and he to the House; who looked upon the Contents thereof, to be such as tended to the fomenting of the Army against them; but respited the Consideration of it till the next Morning, which was the twelfth of October.

Mr. Monk arrives from Scotland, with private Orders from the General to Clarges.

That Night Mr. Nicholas Monk arrived (after not above four days Journey) from Scotland, and had Orders from the General, to tell Clarges, That he was resolved, if the Parliament would be resolute in asserting their own Authority against the Army, he would assist them in it; and if required thereunto, march into England in their Defence.

Clarges, early the next Morning, communicated this to Walton, Haslerig, and Scot, who were so much encouraged by it, That at the first sitting of the House, they moved, that the Doors might be shut, that none of their Members might go out; and then after a long and brisk Debate, they Ordered, That the Commissions of Lambert, Desborow, Berry, Kelsey, Ashfield, Cobbet, Packer, and Barrow, who subscribed the said Letter, should be void.

The Commissions of Lambert, Desborow, and others, voted void.

They had it in Motion, to Declare at the same time, that the next immediate Officers to them should have their Commands conferred on them, but delayed that till the next day, yet ordered the Names of those Officers to be brought to them: And before they parted, they made an Act, appointing Commissioners for the Government of the Army; wherein they first repealed and made void the ACT Constituting Charles Fleetwood Lieutenant-General and Commander in Chief of the Forces raised, and to be raised by Authority of Parliament, within England and Scotland, and all Power and Authority therby given; And that all the Armies for the future should be governed by Commissioners, in the place and stead of a Lieutenant-General. These Commissioners were, Fleetwood, Monk, Ludlow, Haslerig, Morley, Walton, and Overton, who were impowered to execute all and

and ſingular the Powers and Authorities, incident or belonging to the Office of Lieutenant-General, from the 11th of October, 1659. to the 22 of February, 1659, &c.

They likewiſe Ordered the Serjeant at Arms to carry the Orders for Diſcharge of the ſaid Officers Commiſſions, to the reſpective Perſons whom it concerned: And becauſe Lambert was the moſt conſiderable Perſon, and the next Officers to him were men they knew, and in whom they confided, they immediately Ordered Camfield, his Lieutenant-Colonel, to have the Command of his Regiment; and that Skepper the Major ſhould be advanced to be Lieutenant-Colonel, and Captain Bradſhaw to be Major of the Regiment. Three of theſe, lately Conſtituted Commiſſioners for the Government of the Army, met at Night, in the Speakers Chamber at Weſtminſter, and Ordered Colonel Morley's and Colonel Moſſes Regiments, as a guard to the Parliament, who poſſeſſed themſelves of the Palace-Yard, and the Great Hall: Lambert, on the other ſide, ſeeing what was like to become of him, if Matters were driven on at that Rate, as they were begun againſt him, thought beſt to play his Game, while it was in his power to prevent; and to that end drew ſome Regiments together, who marched to Kings-Street, and poſſeſſed themſelves of all Avenues to the Parliament.

Lambert removed from his Regiment, and the Officers under him ſucceſſively advanced.

Col. Morley and Moſs ordered with their Regiments to Guard the Houſe.

Lambert, with the Reg. that adhere, ſtops the Paſſages to the Parl. Houſe.

In the Morning, the Speaker came with his Coach towards the Houſe; but at the Entry into the Palace-Yard, he was ſtop'd by Lieutenant-Colonel Duckenfield; and after a little Expoſtulation was forced to return. The Souldiers on both ſides kept their Station till towards the Evening, in a Poſture of Hoſtility, ready to have fired one againſt the other, only expecting when the Word would be given for Onſet; ſo that it was verily thought the Buſineſs would have come to a ſharp Conflict between them: but they were better adviſed, inſomuch, that the Council of State meeting at White-Hall, and ordering all of them to draw off to their Quarters, both Parties agreed thereunto, and marched away that Night: However, Lamberts Party obtained their Deſire foraſmuch as none of the Members were permitted that Day to aſſemble; and for the future, Fleetwood took care alwaies to keep good Guards at the Door of the Parliament-Houſe, to prevent them from Meeting. The next Day divers of the chief Officers of the Army met at White-Hall, and choſe Ten Perſons as a Council, for carrying on the Affairs and Government of the Common-wealth, till further Order. Theſe were Fleetwood, Lambert, Whitlock, Sir Henry Vane, Desborow, Sir James Harrington, Major Salway, Berry, Sydenham, and Archibald Johnſton a Scotchman, commonly called the Laird of Warreſton; And at Walling-ford-Houſe, the ſame Day, the General Council of Officers agreed, That Fleetwood ſhould be Commander in Chief over all the Armies; That Lambert ſhould be the next chief Officer under him; and Desborow Commiſſary General of the Horſe; and that all the Officers, to be conſtituted in the Army, ſhould be nominated by Sir Henry Vane, Fleetwood, Lambert, Desborow, Ludlow, and Berry; but in eſpecial manner they took care for the preparing of Articles of War, for the good Government and Diſcipline of the Army, as that which would be moſt neceſſary for their Conſiſtence. In this they were very induſtrious; and in all the time ſince the firſt modelling of their Armies, their Diſcipline was ſo exact, that the Carriage of their Souldiery was very tolerable to the People, and that made their Enormities, in reference to the Government, leſs obnoxious to Vulgar Cenſure. Some mentioned General Monk to be conſidered in their Diſtribution of Offices, but were not hearkned to; and thoſe that oppoſed it, aſſured the reſt, That he had little power over the Officers of his Army; and if he diſagreed to their Counſels, he might be eaſily diſplaced: They had not yet received his Reſolution concerning the Subſcriptions, about which they writ, to be made by his Officers to their Repreſentation and Petition, and therefore were ignorant of his Diſſent from their Actions: So that in Confidence of his Concurrence, they diſpatched Colonel Cobbet to him, with a large Narrative of the Reaſons of their Proceedings.

The Speaker forced to return.

Lambert and his Party diſſolve the Remnant Parl. by hindering the Members from coming into the Houſe.

A Council of Ten Army-Officers appointed to be Managers of the State-Affairs pro tempore.

The prevailing Party of the Army no great Favourers of Gen. Monk.

The Lord Mordant, and ſome others of the Kings Friends, lying at Callais, immediately upon the News of theſe Diſorders in England, diſpatched Mr. Nicholas Armorer to his Majeſty, who was then at Fontarabia, induſtriouſly ſoliciting for Supplies of Men and Money, of which he had large Promiſes from the Spaniards; and for the defraying the Expenſes of his Journey, he received from Don Lewis d' Haro a Preſent of Twenty Thouſand Crowns: His Majeſty had once a purpoſe to have gone directly to Madrid; but upon the Advice brought to him by Mr. Armorer, in hopes that ſomething might fall out in England to his Advantage, he choſe to return to Bruxels. The Earl of St. Albans coming up to the Borders to the King, juſt upon the Diſſolution of the Treaty, met his Majeſty at Bayon, in his Return from Fontarabia; Cardinal Mazarini being before departed from St. John de Luz, not having received any Viſit from his Majeſty before his Departure.

Mr. Armorer ſent by the L. Mordant to the King at Fontarabia to inform him how matters went in England.

The King returns from Fontarabia toward Bruxels, meeting the Earl of St. Albans by the way.

The Earl of St. Albans conferred much with the King whilſt he ſtaid with him, which was not long, and then he went to Paris, whither the King followed him incognito by eaſie journeys; and after ſome ſtay there, went from thence to Bruxels.

At this time ſuch of the Kings Friends as had opportunity were very active in his Service, amongſt whom the endeavours of Mr. Evelyn, of Says-Court near Deptford in Kent, is not to be omitted, who having ſome acquaintance with Colonel Herbert Morley, one of the five Commiſſioners for the Command of the Army, whoſe Birth, Education, and Intereſt in his Country rendred him unlikely to be cordially inclin'd to proſtitute himſelf to the ruine of his Country: he attempted with juſt and honeſt Arguments to draw him to the Royal Party, to which he believed he might be very uſeful, as having a greater credit than any of his Party in Suſſex, where he lived, in caſe his Majeſty ſhould Land there, and having alſo also a good influence upon the Fleet, and two of the Army-Regiments.

Morley, after some Hesitation, was perswaded by Mr. Evelyn to return to his Allegiance, and he desired him to intercede with the King for a Pardon to himself, and some few others of his Relations, (which he named) and then departed into his Country, and gave him notice how to correspond further with him.

The Council of Officers consult about a Frame of Government.

The Council of Officers had frequent Meetings at White-Hall, and a Junto of the wisest of them were in deep Consultation, how to make such a Frame of Government as should be durable and lasting, against all Attempts whatsoever. They found most of the Gentry in England to be some way or other involved in the late Endeavours for the King, and were advising of a way to seize all their Estates, and divide them amongst their own Party; whereby the Riches of the Nation, the most powerful of all Interests, would be absolutely changed into the Hands of Persons irreconcileable to Monarchy. This was such Advice, as if it had succeeded, might have proved fatal, and laid a Foundation to Slavery, never to have been subverted.

A certain number of Persons called to take upon them the Government, under the Title of a Committee of Safety.

The General Council, on the 26 of this Month, nominated 23 Persons, to be intrusted with the Management of Publick Affairs, whom they called a Committee of Safety; and the next Day they invited them to sit, and gave them Powers and Instructions; of which, the chief were,

Their Instructions.

1. To Execute all the Powers of the late Council of State, together with Authority to call all Delinquents to Accompt, that were in the late Insurrection, and to proceed to a bringing them to Justice, and to give Indemnity to all Persons that had acted for the Service of the Common-wealth, since the Year, 1649.

2. To oppose and suppress all Rebellions and Insurrections.

3. To treat with Forein States and Princes.

4. To raise the Militia in the several Counties.

5. To dispose of all Places of Trust that are void, and to remove such as are Scandalous.

6. To make Sale and Compositions for all Delinquents Estates.

Their names

The Names of these Governours were, Bulstrode Whitlock, lately made Keeper of their Great Seal, Fleetwood, Lambert, Desborow, Steel Chancellour of Ireland, Sir Henry Vane, Ludlow, Sydenham, Salway, Walter Strickland, Berry, Lawrence, Sir James Harrington, the Laird of Warreston, Alderman Ireton, Tichborn, Hewson, Clark, Bennet, Colonel Lilburn, Cornelius Holland, Henry Brandriff, and Robert Thompson.

They likewise published a Declaration, in the Close whereof they Declare, That

The substance of their Declaration.

"They think themselves obliged, for preventing the manifold Evils and Inconveniencies, which must necessarily fall upon the other Good People of the Nation, as well as themselves, by reason of the several Orders, Acts, pretended Acts, or other Declaration, or any of them, Enacted, made, or past on Monday the tenth of this instant October, and on Tuesday and Wednesday then next following, to declare them, and every of them null and void to all intents and purposes: And likewise all Acts, Orders, and Proceedings thereupon had or done, in as full and ample manner, as if the said Orders, Acts, pretended Acts, or Declarations, and every of them, had never been: All which they publish and declare, that all persons concerned may take notice thereof, and no person whatsoever suffer any further prejudice thereby, hoping that all peaceable, well-minded, and unprejudiced persons will acquiesce in the Necessity and Justice thereof.

"They further Declare to the World, that it is upon their Hearts, and they earnestly desire, and shall endeavour, that a due Liberty may be assured to all the Free-born People of these Nations, both as Men and Christians; That a full and through Reformation of the Law may be effected; as also, that a faithful, godly, and painful Gospel-Preaching-Ministry may be incouraged, and provided for, by some certain Way that may be less troublesome to them, and less vexatious to the People, than that of Tythes. And further, that they have no Aim or Ends to set up a Military or Arbitrary Government over the Common-wealth: But have already provided, That the Civil and Executive part of Government shall be lodged in a Committee of Safety; and they obliged in a short time, to prepare such a Form of Government, as may best suit and comport with a Free-State and Common-wealth, without a Single Person, Kingship, or House of Peers; And that they shall, to the utmost of their Endeavours, labour to obtain those desirable things so often declared for; and to maintain and preserve the Peace of these Nations, in their several Stations and Places, and shall hope, That God for his own Glory, and the good of his own People, will give a blessed end of these Troubles, by a happy Settlement upon the Principles formerly declared for; and which have been, and still are, so earnestly breathed after, by all those that truly fear his Name.

And then to Cajole the Godly Party (as they called them) they proceed to tell them;

"They doubt not, but such being truly sensible of the many Temptations besetting them on every Hand, the great Difficulties they laboured under (and know not what further Streights a Day may bring forth) will say on their Behalfs, Who are sufficient for these Things? And out of former Experiences being taught, That the Lord is a present help in time of Trouble, will cry aloud for them before the Throne of Grace, That the LORD himself may appear, and carry on his own Work in their Hands: And if it shall please him by his Spirit, to stir up those that fear his Name to be instant on their behalf, they shall not fear what evil man can do unto them.

These

The Exorbitancy of their Actions somewhat restrained by the mixture of some moderate men among them.

These unreasonable Men, impatient of all Government, thought by these Insinuations, to silence all Gainsayers, and to make the People believe, they could Frame any Government, and not be obliged to submit to it. Their Confidence was great, and their frequent Invasion of several Constitutions so successful, that they thought they were not by any to be opposed, in the most extravagant of their Actings: yet in this Design of theirs, they had the better grounded hope, in regard Vane, Whitlock, and Salway, and some others of the most prudent of their Party, assisted in their Councils.

Whitlock, indeed, was much Censured for his Conjunction with them; but some wise men, that marked his Demeanour, and the Moderation he used, did believe, that if he had not in a great measure restrained the Exorbitancy of their Intentions, they had in the short time of their Tyranny, done much mischief to many of the King's Friends.

The substance of Gen. Monk's Letters to Fleetwood and Lambert

That which put the greatest Check to their Carrear, and gave some Life to the fainting Hopes of all good Men, was the Arrival of Letters from General Monk in Scotland, to Fleetwood and Lambert, which came to them the 28 of October, in the Evening. He complained therein, Of their Violation of Faith to the Parliament; and declared his Resolution, to endeavour to restore them to their Power, against all Opposition whatsoever.

Clarges dispatched away into Scotland by the Grandees of the Army, together with Col. Talbot, to solicit Monk to a Treaty.

Fleetwood, Lambert, and Desborow immediately met at White-Hall in much Confusion; and about Twelve at Night they sent Major Haynes to desire Clarges to come to them; who when he came, after some question of his knowledge of the Generals Proceedings (to which he made very wary Answers) They desired him to go into Scotland with Colonel Talbot, (whose Regiment was then at Edinburgh) to prevail with Monk for a Treaty of Mediation, to prevent the effusion of Bloud. They said, they chose Talbot to accompany him, because he was very grateful to the General.

Clarges was very glad of this Opportunity to get away, (for he feared to be much worse Treated) and they were so pressing for his Departure, that they allowed him but three hours preparation for his Journey.

Monk well inform'd of all passages in England.

In the mean time, Monk in Scotland had by an Express from Clarges, which came to him the 17th of October, received exact Information of the Interruption of the Parliament; and at several times before, he had Notice of all the Proceedings introductory to it, which made him expect no less, and therefore gave him time to prepare for what hapned.

What Forces he had, and how dispersed.

He had in Scotland at this time Ten Regiments of Foot compleat, each consisting of a Thousand Souldiers, besides Officers; except four Companies which had been drawn into England a little before upon the Alarm of Sir George Booth's Rising; his Numbers of Horse were but small, having had two Regiments of them likewise removed upon the same occasion: so that there remained with him but two Regiments of Horse, viz. his own, and Colonel Philip Twistleton's and one Regiment of Dragoons, Commanded by Major General Morgan: The Foot were dispersed at great distances, Eight Companies of his own Regiment lay at Edinburgh, and two of them at Dalkeith, where his Residence usually was: All Colonel Talbot's Regiment was quartered in Edinburgh; Nine Companies of Col. Wilks his Regiment were in the Cittadel at Leith, and one of them in the Castle at Edinburgh; Nine Companies of Colonel Read's Regiment were at Sterling, and the Tenth in England; Eight Companies of Colonel Overton's Regiment at Dundee, and two of them in England; Colonel Daniel's Regiment lay at St. Johnstons; Colonel Sawries Regiment at Aire; Colonel Cobbets at Glasgow; Nine Companies of Colonel Fairfax's Regiment at Aberdeen, and the other in England; and part of Colonel Smith's Regiment at Innerness; and the rest of the Garrisons in the Highlands: The Horse and Dragoons lay in several places near the Foot-Quarters; but at such distances, as might not incommode the Country.

The late Commissioners of Nomination, whilest they sate at White-Hall, had much changed the Officers in all the Regiments, both of Horse and Foot, which raised great Discontents amongst them: They had given Colonel Daniel's Regiment to Peirson, his Lieutenant-Colonel, an Anabaptist; They had also displaced Hubblethorn, who was Major to Colonel Talbot's Regiment; Hughes, who was Major to Wilkes, they had reduced to be but Captain, and preferred one Knolles an Anabaptist to his Command; Johnson, the Eldest Captain in his own Regiment of Horse, they put out, and many more (too long to mention) in all the Regiments; few or none of those New Officers chosen at White-Hall, to supply the Places of those removed, were yet come into Scotland: So that General Monk taking that Opportunity, to retain all the displaced Officers in their respective Commands, made them, who had been thus disobliged before, thereby intirely depend on him.

Monk keeps in those Officers whom the Commissioners had displaced.

Having resolved to stand upon his Guard, and Declare against the Army in England, the first thing he did, was to Consult which way was best to secure these Regiments, and the several Garrisons, with least hazard; and knowing that in Actions of great Concernment, there was more use of Execution than Counsel, he made very little Hælitation in what he intended to Act: He was most diffident of his own Regiment of Foot, (which during his Absence in the Dutch War, had been so transformed, that most of the Officers were become Anabaptists) and the three Regiments in Glasgow, Aire, and St. Johnstons.

And removes those whom he himself distrusted.

The first Minute that he had Notice of the Disorders at Westminster, which was on the before-mentioned 17th day of October, he sent Captain Jeremy Smith of his own Regiment of of Horse, to Edinburgh and Leith, to signifie his Pleasure to Major Hubblethorn, Major Hughes, and Captain Johnson, to have them come to him to Dalkeith: The first was Major to Talbot's Regiment of Foot; the other, to that of Wilkes, quartered at Leith; and Johnson commanded a Troop in his own Regiment of Horſe.

The General ſignifies his Reſolution to ſeveral of his Officers, to march into England, to re-eſtabliſh the Parliament, and hath their conſent and incouragement.

Theſe came immediately upon Summons to the General, and there they met Captain Morgan of his own Regiment of Foot, and Miller of Wilkes his Regiment, who had the Guards of Dalkeith Houſe: The Lieutenant-Colonel, and Major of the Generals Regiment, were both Anabaptiſts, and at that time abſent; Lieutenant-Colonel Cloeberry, of Read's Regiment, was by chance there, and was adviſed with. The General communicated his Intelligence to them, and his Reſolution to march into England with a part of his Army, to re-eſtabliſh the Parliament; To which they all freely conſented: Hubblethorn gave him perfect Aſſurance of all Talbot's Regiment, of which he had now the Command; becauſe the Colonel, and Pounel the Lieutenant-Colonel, were both in England: And indeed much muſt be attributed to the Courage and Diligence of that Gentleman, whoſe Regiment was by him intirely, both Officers and Souldiers, made at the General's Devotion; which being then quartered at Edenburgh, gave a great Reputation to the whole undertaking: For although ſome in all the Regiments, and many in moſt, were ready upon the Confidence they had in the General's Courage and Conduct, and were well inclined towards him; yet they were all apter to follow in any Deſign (as moſt naturally are) than to begin the Action: Captain Johnſon had been by the Nominators at London removed from his Troop, but was now by the General reſtored to it; and as he was Eldeſt Captain of the Regiment, by the abſence of Major Knight, he had the Command, under the General, of all his Regiment of Horſe, and was well-beloved by them: Major Hughes gave him hopes of making all Colonel Wilkes his Regiment at his Service: Hubblethorn (whom he made Lieutenant-Colonel of the Regiment) was Ordered to draw it early the next Morning into the High-Street at Edenburgh, and to let all the Musketeers have Matches lighted, with Powder and Bullet; And Johnſon was Commanded to be ready in Edenburgh at the ſame time, with his own Troop; and that of one Captain Symnel's, an honeſt ſtout Officer: Hughes was appointed, in the abſence of his Colonel, and Lieutenant-Colonel, who were ſent for the next Morning to confer with the General, to ſecure the Cittadel at Leith: He had, upon ſome kind of Expectation of Change, kept Captain Witter (of the Regiment lying at St. Johnſtowns) and Captain Robſon (of the Regiment at Aire) both at Edenburgh, and had ſent for them to him; and upon Conference with them, they both undertook, One to ſecure the Cittadel at St. Johnſtowns, and the other at Aire; which were very difficult Service to perform, in regard that moſt of the Officers in thoſe Regiments were very ill-diſpoſed towards the General: Little more was done that Night, but the ſending an Expreſs to Major Knight, who was then in York-ſhire at his own Houſe, to haſten him to his Command.

Great Preparations in Monk's Army, for the fortifying themſelves againſt the prevailing Faction in England.

The next day after dinner the General marched to Edenburgh, with only Captain Smiths Troop of Horſe, having before diſpatched away Witter and Robſon. Morgan had been ſent before to Edenburgh, to draw up his Regiment, but had Orders to give them neither Match, Powder, nor Ball: As ſoon as he came into the High-ſtreet, and found the Regiments in that order he expected, He retired a little into his Quarters, to model his own Regiment, and ſent for Morgan to him, whom he immediately made Lieutenant-Colonel, Captain Nicholas he promoted to be Major, and at the ſame inſtant diſplaced all whom he knew to be diſaffected to him, and ſuch of them as were dangerous, he impriſoned: which done, he march'd with both the Regiments to the Gray-Friers Church, where he called together the Officers, and told them, That the Army in England had broken up the Parliament out of a reſtleſs uncontroulable diſpoſition of being pleaſed with nothing that tended to the welfare and happineſs of the People; that though they had lately taken ſhame to themſelves (in their publick Declaration) for their former Apoſtacies, yet now, finding the Parliament unapt to humour them in all their Extravagancies, they were weary of them: He ſaid he was reſolved to make the Military Power ſubſervient to the Civil, and that, ſince they had their Protection and Entertainment from the Parliament, it was their Duty to ſerve and obey them againſt all oppoſition; which ſhould be his Practice, and he expected their Concurrence and Aſſiſtance to joyn with him. But if any were diſſatisfied, and would declare it to him, they ſhould have free liberty, without Reflection, to leave the Service, and have Paſſes to go home.

The General marches to Edenburgh, and there orders all things to his beſt advantage.

His Speech to his Officers.

Upon this, Colonel Wilkes and his Lieutenant-Colonel, with all that were preſent, unanimouſly declared to live and die with him; Captain Johnſon was then diſpatched to Barwick, to ſecure that Garriſon, which was then under the Command of Lieutenant-Colonel Mayers; and he did it very effectually, and it was a Service of great advantage to Monks Deſigns; Captain Hatt, and Captain Dennis, two well approved Officers of Colonel Cobbets Regiment, being both at Edenburgh when theſe tranſactions were, and having received private Orders to model that Regiment then quartered at Glaſcow, and to march with it to Edenburgh, came thither before any knowledge of the alterations at the Head-Quarters, and privately conſulted with ſuch of the Regiment as they were confident of before they publickly diſcovered their Orders: Lieutenant Colonel Young, who was there in chief in the abſence of the Colonel and Major, did as much as he could to oppoſe it; but he being preſently ſecured, Hatt and Dennis performed their inſtructions, and immediately marched the Regiment to the General.

Capt. Johnſon ſecures Barwick.

Capt. Hatt and Dennis bring off Col. Cobbets Regiment to the General.

Captain Witter, as ſoon as he came to S. Johnſtown, drew up two Companies, whom he moſt confided in, upon the Sands before the Cittadel, and propoſed to them what he had in charge from the General; whereupon they all ſhouted in conſent to it, at the noiſe whereof, the Souldiers coming in confuſion out of the Cittadel, he marched with the foreſaid Companies panies into it, and took poſſeſſion thereof; He made Lieutenant Colonel Keine, and Major Kelke Priſoners; the firſt whereof was afterwards, upon his conſent to joyn with the General, releaſed from his Impriſonment, but Kelke was ſtill detained. Of this Regiment at St. Johnſtown, Witter, for his handſome performance of this undertaking, is by the General advanced to be Major.

And is made Major of the Regiment.

Robſon at Ayre was more deliberate in the execution of his Orders; he dealt ſo with the Officers, that moſt of them, except the Colonel and Lieutenant-Colonel, agreed to comply with the General. The Lieutenant-Colonel privately got away to Carliſle, and ſecured that Garriſon for the Army in England; The Colonel temporiz'd a while, but finding his Arts ſucceſles, and thereupon flying away into England, the General gave the Command of the Regiment to Robſon, for his good Service, and ſent into England for Colonel Daniel, who had been a little before diſplaced, (and Pierſon his Lieutenant-Colonel advanced to the Command of that Regiment) to take again his Command of Colonel thereof.

And is made Col. of the Regiment.

The ſettlement of theſe two Regiments gave much incouragement to the General, in reference to the carrying on of his Deſign; and the rather, in regard he himſelf had look't upon it as none of the eaſieſt works to compaſs.

He made no alteration at firſt in thoſe Companies which belonged to Colonel Overton at Dundee, becauſe he had hopes to gain him to declare for him with the Garriſon at Hull, then under his Command; and in regard they were on that ſide of the River Tay, they could not have done much if they had oppoſed. He ſent to Colonel Fairfax, who quartered with his Regiment at Aberdeen, to haſte with it to Edenburgh, and Lieutenant-Colonel Cloeberry was ſent to Read, his Colonel at Sterling, to appoint him to march to the General with all his men, except two Companies, which were to be left for the ſafety of the Town and Caſtle. And at the ſame time, he ſent a Commiſſion to Innerneſs to Colonel Man, to be Colonel of that Regiment, in the place of Smith, (who adhered to the Army in England) and appointed him to ſend three of his beſt Companies to Edenburgh. He diſpatch'd alſo ſome truſty Officers to the Horſe-Troops, and then went himſelf to Leith, to ſettle the Cittadel and Regiment in obedience to him; upon his firſt coming, he diſplaced Knolles, and confined him, and reſtored Hughes to be again Major to the Regiment, and likewiſe ſome other Anabaptiſt Officers were put out, and others placed in their Rooms; Captain Clifton, who with a Company of this Regiment from Leith, had the Command of Edenburgh Caſtle, upon promiſe of faithfulneſs and ſervice to the General, was by him continued in his Command with Truſt and Confidence. And thus theſe three Regiments of Foot at Leith and Edenburgh, were in one Afternoon pretty well ſettled, till more time could be allowed to refine them.

Smith's Regiment at Innerneſs given to Colonel Man.

The General marcheth to Leith, to ſettle the Cittadel, and Regiment there.

Upon the 21. he marched ſome Companies of Horſe and Foot to Linlithgow, intending to go thence to Glaſcow, to ſettle Cobbets Regiment, of which he was in ſome doubt; but he there received Intelligence of what was done by Hatt and Dennis, and therefore went no further.

And thence to Linlithgow.

He there alſo had notice of the ſubmiſſion of the Cittadel at Ayre, and that Barwick was rendred to him, where Colonel Cobbet was ſtayed and detained in Priſon, as he was coming into Scotland with his Regiment, and it was ſeaſonably done; for if he had been permitted to paſs, the opinion which was had of him by the Souldiers, might have much hindered the Generals Proceedings. He was brought with a Guard to Edenburgh Caſtle, and kept there, the General being much incenſed againſt him, upon private advice that he had Inſtructions to have ſeized him, if he had not agreed to the Armies Actions in England. At Linlithgow at a Council of Officers, it was adviſed that ſome way ſhould be uſed to draw off the Independent Churches in England, from favouring the Engliſh Army, which would have much weakened that Party, if it had ſucceeded, for moſt of the inferiour Officers were of that perſwaſion; for the effecting of this, a Declaration was framed, agreed to, and publiſhed and diſperſed all over England: And at the ſame time, another Declaration was alſo made to ſatisfie the Kingdom in general, with the reaſon of his taking Arms, alledging that he did it for the vindication of the Rights and Liberties of the People, and the freedom of Parliaments.

Col. Cobbet detained Priſoner at Barwick.

Two Declarations publiſhed by the General, in vindication of theſe proceedings of his.

Two Expoſtulatory Letters were alſo writ, the one to Fleetwood, and the other to Lambert, blaming the violence of their Proceedings againſt the Parliament, and another to the Speaker, to be informed of the Condition wherein the Houſe then was; declaring therein, that whereas there ought to be a right underſtanding between the Parliament and the Army, he would be ready, in caſe the Army perſiſted to diſobey their Orders, to aſſiſt them with the Forces under his Command, according to his Duty.

By this time, Major Knight was returned out of England; for hearing of the diſorders at London, and that ſome Jealouſies had been entertained of him, upon an Information that he had been ſome Months before engaged with the Lord Caſtleton in Sir George Booths Riſing, he thought beſt for his own ſecurity, to make all poſſible haſt down to his Command; his Arrival fell out to be three days after the General had firſt Declared; Morgans Regiment of Dragoons, was made a Regiment of Horſe; and Major Farmer was ſent with a Troop to ſecure Carliſle, who when he came thither, did not march into it with Confidence, as Johnſon did into Barwick; but ſent in to treat with the Governour, and was ſo long doing it, till Elton, that Commanded the Town, had fixed the Souldiers to a Reſolution of keeping him out; Moreover, Monk conſidering that his Army could not be got together in ſix weeks time, to march into England, he therefore to amuſe the Faction there, ſent Major Knight with four Troops of choice Horſe, and ſix Companies of Foot, to ſurprize Newcaſtle. The Horſe-Troops were Commanded by Knight, Johnſon, Wilmot, and Simnell, and the Foot by Miller, Manſfield; Collins, Winter, Seymor, and Belcham, all gallant and well-reſolved men. But being come as far as Morpeth, he had advice, that ſome Forces were got into Newcaſtle before him, which being intimated alſo to the General, he preſently countermanded him and his Party to Anwick, where he ſtaid for ſome time; The not taking Newcaſtle was no diſcouragement to the General, or his Army; for upon more deliberate Conſideration, he thought the miſs of it rather fortunate, than prejudicial to him, ſince if he had taken it, it would in all probability have been immediately beſieged by Lambert. And then he muſt have been obliged to attempt the relief of it, and fought before he could have been well enough prepared for it, and thereby have hazarded his whole deſign.

Monk invites Lieutenant Gen. Ludlow in Ireland to a conjunction with him.

The General, at the ſame time that he ſent the before-mentioned Letters to London, did likewiſe ſend a Meſſenger with Letters to Lieutenant General Ludlow, who Commanded the Army in Ireland, to move him to joyn with him, or at leaſt to repreſent to him ſo fair an accompt of his Actions, as might induce him not to be his hinderance in any of his undertakings.

Col. Lilburn in Yorkſhire makes all poſſible oppoſition againſt Gen. Monk.

Colonel Lilburn, who lay at York with ſome Forces, upon the firſt Rumour of Monk's Declaration, drew what Forces together he could, and without ſtaying to be well informed of the Reaſons of Fleetwood and Lamberts breaking up the Parliament, He drew all the Officers in thoſe parts to enter into an Aſſociation againſt Monk, and to joyn with the Army at London, in whatſoever they deſigned.

He indeavours to ſeduce the Generals Secretary from his Service, but prevails not.

He alſo writ to Mr. Clarke, the Generals Secretary, who was an active uſeful Inſtrument in his affairs, to ſeduce him from his Service; the truth is, the greateſt part of Clarkes Eſtate was in England, and he was a man of ſo civil and ingenuous a Converſation, that he might have been the better excuſed in a Neutrality to both Parties, and his Intereſt did direct him to it. But he was reſolved to hazard all his Fortunes in the Generals Bottom, and would not by threats or cunning, which were both uſed by Lilburn to him, be prevailed with to quit his Party. For which his fidelity and conſtancy, at this time, he was ever after ſo much eſteemed by the General, that he truſted him with his moſt ſecret tranſactions.

He intercepts the Generals Letters to Maj. Gen. Morgan

Major General Morgan had lain long ſick of the Gout at York, and began about this time to recover his health. The Letter which Monk ſent to him was intercepted by Lilburn, which Morgan a little reſented, but thought it adviſable ſo far to conceal his paſſion (till he might have convenient opportunity to get into Scotland) as to ſeem to Lilburn rather to diſlike than approve of the Generals proceedings.

Talbot and Clarges arrive at Edenburgh, and are well received by the General.

Colonel Talbot and Clarges came not to Edenburgh till the ſecond of November; they were both very well received by Monk, but eſpecially Clarges, being his Brother-in-Law, with whom he had that night much Conference in private. The General wondred that Fleetwood and Lambert would ſend him, and thought it a good Omen to his ſucceſs that he had him to aſſiſt his deſigns. Clarges frankly asked him what was the true end he aimed at in this Enterpriſe? telling him, that it was impoſſible for him to be ever truſted after this Rupture if he patched up a Peace with the Engliſh Army, and withal acquainting him that he obſerved a great Conſternation in the Officers and Souldiers as he paſſed, and that he believed many of them would fall off to him.

He diſcovers to Clarges ſome glimmering of his intentions.

The General (as the moſt reſerved man then living) was in ſome trouble to be preſſed to diſcover his Intentions, and at that time opened himſelf no further than to let him know he was reſolved to endeavour to free his Native Country from the ſlavery it was under, and to effect it, he thought it one of the beſt Expedients would be to reſtore the Parliament; but in their Admiſſion to ſit (if it were by his Arms) he would make no difference betwixt them; but let in as well the Secluded Members as others. Having ſaid this, he Conjured Clarges to ſecreſie, being very ſenſible, that the jealouſie had on him by the Army was ſo great (it having been often caſt in his diſh, by ſome of his ill-willers, that the King was in the bottom of his Deſigns) that all he could contrive, would be little enough to beget a Confidence, even in his own Party to engage with him.

The preſent condition of Monk for money and Ammunition.

As to the preſent Condition of his Affairs, he acquainted him that he had about Seventy thouſand pounds in money, part whereof was already in his Treaſury, and the reſt would in a ſhort time be paid into it. And that all his Magazines were very well ſtored with Ammunition, Arms, and all other neceſſaries, and that he had in part modelled his Army fit for his purpoſes, and ſhould in a while perfect it. Clarges let him know, that the wants in Fleetwood and Lamberts Army were very great, and that upon Lamberts Expedition they were not able to advance one months Pay for his Army, which would make them by tree-Quarter be very burthenſome and diſtaſteful to the Country. So that if by a Treaty, or any other means he could protract time, his buſineſs might be done without hazard. The General replied, That he thought the overture of a Treaty from Fleetwood and Lambert might be improved to his great advantage, for he could not in a months time draw his men together. And that his ſending Knight with a Party to Lodge at Anwick, was to make them think him in greater readineſs than he was, the more thereby to diſtract their Levies. The General then reſolved upon a Treaty, and the next Morning ſummoned his chief Officers together, to nominate Commiſſioners, and to reſolve upon Inſtructions for them. He choſe to adviſe with his Officers in all theſe matters to free them from ſuſpicion. Colonel Talbot was very glad his Journey was ſo ſucceſsful to obtain a Treaty ſo eaſily. The General and his Officers met, and at the firſt Propoſition they conſented to the motion for a Treaty, and when he put them to name fit Perſons to be Commiſſioners, they referred it to him.

Lambert's Army in great want of money.

Gen. Monk takes hold for his advantage of Lambert's overture for a Treaty.

He

Mr. Knight, Col. Cloeberry, and Col. Wilks, made choice of to be the Generals Commissioners in this Treaty.

He then appointed Major Knight, and Lieutenant Colonel Cloeberry to be two, and put it to them to name a third, and they proposed Colonel Wilks, who was reputed to be a good Religious man, and acceptable to Fleetwood, and the Officers in England. They then came to consider of Instructions, and were so hot in debate, that the Question was not without much contest carried for allowing them a fortnights time for the Treaty. The General was perplexed in his mind at this, for he would not have them limited to time, because that was the only thing he wanted, yet he discovered no displeasure: however, in the rest of the Instructions, he so invented matter to confound their debates, That they had no power given them to conclude any thing; and they were to insist on the restoring the Parliament: But if the Members should refuse to sit, then to debate of some other Form of Government. They were likewise to provide for an Act of Indemnity for all Acts done since the first of October, and to take care that the Arrears of such part of the English Assessment as was appropriated to the Pay of the Army in Scotland, should be forthwith paid; And that a Godly, Learned, and Faithful Ministry, with competent maintenance, and other incouragements, should be continued in the Three Nations; the like regard being had to Schools and Universities, with many other matters sufficiently remote from the present Affair. Moreover, it was particularly inserted, That they should provide, that the Acts of the Army in England, should not be deemed the Acts of a General Council of the Army, without the Concurrence of the Officers of the Armies of Scotland and Ireland.

Their Instructions.

They meet Lambert at York, and began the treaty there. But not agreeing, they set forward to London.

These Commissioners were hasted away, and Lambert was so far advanced with his Army, as to meet them at York, where he told them he had full power from Fleetwood, the Officers of the Army, and the Committee of Safety, to treat, and conclude with them of all differences. They seemed not averse to it, but when they began to enter upon the matter, and proposed the restitution of the Parliament, he told them, Fleetwood and the Officers at London had agreed with him and his Officers not to conclude of any thing concerning that matter, without the common consent of all, and so they went forwards towards London. Nevertheless, as a thing previous to the Treaty, it was by both Parties accorded, That the Forces of neither should advance from their Quarters, and that there should be a free uninterrupted intercourse of Letters during the Treaty.

Monk's Army Inferiour to Lamberts in number, but better paid.

The Army of Horse and Foot with Lambert did amount to near Twelve thousand, and Monk had not above half the Number; nevertheless he had this advantage, that he paid all his Men, and the other did not. The way he had for providing Money, was very accidentall: The late Parliament (so called) about the latter end of June (as is before expressed) had made a short Act to authorize the payment of a years Tax upon England, Scotland, and Ireland, appointed to be raised by one of Cromwel's Parliaments: And they in that Act directed One Moyety of the money to be paid the First of August, and the other the Tenth of October following. The Proportion for Scotland to pay of this Tax was Six Thousand pounds a Month; and in regard the Country was poor, and burdened with many other Payments, the General writ to all the Commissioners of Shires, and indulged them so far as to grant them forbearance of payment till the Tenth of October for the first Moyety, and Two months after for the rest, which they readily undertook to do, and performed it for the most part: And this he had represented so effectually by Clarges his Agent to the Parliament, that he got Twenty thousand pounds in Money to be sent into Scotland towards the Pay of his Army, till that money could be Collected. And that was the bulk of all the Money he had in this Undertaking; but it was increased by Excise and Custome, and other Duties; for after he declared, he seized on all. And of this we make the more particular mention in this place, because some, Ignorant of these Transactions, have published, That the General had an Assessment raised for him at a Convention of the Nobility of Scotland; which was first invented by the Seditious in England to his prejudice, and afterwards, because uncontradicted, believed for a Truth.

Major Gen. Morgan takes his Journey into Scotland to G. Monk.

Lambert was informed by his Confident Lilburn, That Major General Morgan (who had been sometime sick of the Gout in York) was dissenting from General Monk's Proceedings, and that he would be willing to go to him to dissuade him from the pursuit of them; and therefore he dealt with him to take a journey thither (on pretense of repairing to his Charge, which was then in Scotland) to use the credit he had with him to an Accommodation betwixt them: Morgan (who waited only for an occasion to get away) was glad of this Overture, and undertook to do his part in this business, so that at a days warning he began his Journey from York towards Edenburgh. He had with him one Troutbeck a Chirurgeon, (upon pretense of taking care of his health) a very subtile Intelligent Person, Excellent in his Profession, and withal of great discretion, and much beloved by the Souldiers of both Armies, and of considerable Interest amongst them. These got safe to Edenburgh about the seventh or eighth of November; And the coming of Morgan was a good Accession to Monk's Party, and a great encouragement to all the Officers and Souldiers: For he was esteemed by them to be, next the General, a Person of the best Conduct of any then in Arms in the Three Nations, having been near Forty years a Souldier, and present in the greatest Battels and Sieges of Christendom for a great part of that time; and particularly in Flanders, where he Commanded a Brigade of Foot, he acquitted himself to the Astonishment of his Enemies, and the admiration of Marshal Thurene, and all the French Commanders in that Service with him. At his first coming to the General, he asked him aloud, merrily, If he would lay down his Arms, and be friends with Fleetwood and Lambert? To which he was answered by him, If they would restore the Parliament he had little more to say; and if he pleased, he might let them

His joyning with Monk, a matter of much Importance.

The Discourse between the General and him, at their first meeting them know as much. Morgan Replied, I promiſed to ask you the Queſtion, but not to return to them that ſent me, if you denied it: I am very glad I am here with you to aſſiſt you, and follow your Fortunes in all your undertakings; You know I am no States-man; I am ſure you are a Lover of your Country, and therefore I will joyn with you in all your Actions, and ſubmit to your Prudence and Judgment in the Conduct of them.

This generous Friendſhip was kindly received by Monk, and it was the more valuable, in that it was done at a time when the Army in England was at its greateſt height; and that in Scotland very inconſiderable in reſpect of the other, and not yet well ſettled; for a day or two before, one of the Troops of Morgan's own Regiment ran over Tweed to Lambert.

He privately delivers a Letter to the General from Mr. Bowles a Miniſter of York.

In the Evening Morgan was private with the General, and delivered him a Letter which he brought from Mr. Bowles a Miniſter of York, a very eminent Man of thoſe Parts, and of great Credit with my Lord Fairfax, and many others of good Note in that County. (Clarges being yet at Edenburgh, and Conſulted with in the buſineſs.) The Letter imported, That the Lord Fairfax, and many others of good Intereſt in Yorkſhire, were willing to joyn with the General, but that they diſapproved of his Declaration which was reſtrained to the reſtoring of that Part of the Parliament only which ſate after the Seclusion of the reſt; and was filled with many Proteſtations for the aſſerting of no other than a Common-wealth Government. To this the General anſwered, That Clarges could witneſs his Intentions in thoſe Particulars, That what was Printed in his Name, was not (at that Conjuncture) to be regarded as the Reſult of his own Reaſon, becauſe his Writings were drawn by other hands; and till his Affairs had a firmer Conſiſtency, and he more Power in his hands, it was unſeaſonable for him to Contradict what was done, ſince all that was writ, could ſcarce prevail with the Army to believe he had not a Deſign to ſet up the King in his Government. The Concluſion of this, was to ſend Clarges to Fairfax, Roſſiter, and ſeveral others, to engage; it being thought expedient, at the ſame time, to imploy all poſſible care to amuſe the Parliament and Army, till the General could get a Power in his hands to Juſtifie other Counſels. Clarges was diſpatch'd to Bowles, with a Letter of Credit to him, to cauſe a belief in him of what he ſhould acquaint him with, on the part of the General; and another Letter to the ſame purpoſe to my Lord Fairfax, from whom he was to have an Addreſs to Roſſiter in Lincolnſhire.

Clarges ſent to Fairfax Roſſiter, and others, to engage them to General Monk.

Talbot knew nothing of theſe Traverſes, but carried himſelf with much moderation all the time of his ſtay, and with ſo much profeſſion of reſpect to the General, That he aſſured him, If he would go to London and be a Neuter, he would preſerve his Regiment for him: Which he promiſed to do, but was afterwards by the importunity of Lambert, prevailed upon to act contrary to that Engagement, and (ſome think) to his own Inclinations; for he was eſteemed by all that knew him to be a Perſon not averſe to a better and more Juſt Government than he at that time lived under, and was obliging to all the Gentry where he lived, that needed his aſſiſtance and help.

Col. Talbot prevailed upon by Lambert to take part with him.

Fleetwood could not conceal his fears; for the ſame Week that Talbot and Clarges were ſent to endeavour a Reconciliation, before he had any return from them, Captain Dean, one of the Treaſurers, and not long after, Mr. Caryll the Miniſter, with Colonel Goff and Whaley, were ſent to the General on the ſame Errand: Likewiſe Mr. Hammond and Mr. Barker were deputed in the name of the Independent Congregations in and about London, to mediate a Peace betwixt the two Armies.

Capt. Dean Mr. Caryll, Col. Whaley, and Goff ſent by Fleetwood to Ge. Monk.

Mean while, Clarges and Talbot took their leaves of the General to return home. The pretence of Dean's coming into Scotland before Caryll and Whaley, was to look after his Charge; for he was one of the Treaſurers at War; but he privately diſperſed Tickets as he travelled, to ſeduce Monk's Souldiers from him, bringing him withal a Letter from Fleetwood, which contained an Offer of what Command in the Army he ſhould deſire, upon the leaſt private intimation of his inclining to take part with him: This made the General to believe there were ſome Jealouſies betwixt Lambert and him; which he might have improved to the breaking of one of them; but he choſe the more Generous way, and refuſed the Offer, Letting him know, He ſought not himſelf, but the good of the Nations; and when that was obtained, he would rather lay the Command, he had, down, than ſeek to enlarge it.

Fleetwood by Letters courts Monk to ſide with him.

Lieutenant Colonel Barret came at the ſame time from Ireland with a Letter from Sir Hardreſs Waller, John Jones, and the ruling people of that Country (for Ludlow was then in England) declaring their Refuſal to joyn with the General; Letting him know by their ſaid Letter, bearing date the fourth of November.

The ruling Faction in Ireland declare their reſolution not to joyn with Gen. Monk.

That at a General Meeting of the Officers of the Iriſh Army, they Unanimouſly reſolved not to approve of the Reſolution he had taken, which tended (as they alledg'd) to the Engaging of part of the Armies of theſe Nations againſt their Brethren, or the dividing of them in Intereſt or Affection; being well aſſured, that ſuch a Practice would be found in the Iſſue to be nothing elſe but the opening of a door for the Common Enemy to come in, (whatever Umbrage ſhould be put upon it) and deſtroy thoſe very Perſons and Authority, on whoſe behalf their affections inclined them to undergo very great difficulties. Adding, That they held it a Duty incumbent on them towards him (as their honourable Friend of whom they had a very high eſteem) in the behalf of all the people of the Lord in theſe three Nations, to bear their Witneſs againſt any ſuch Reſolution or Practice, and to improve their utmoſt endeavours to prevent the ſame.

The General was not at all diſcouraged at this return to his Civil Letters and Declaration ſent thither, having at the ſame time received advice from Cornet Monk by another hand, That Sir Charles Coot, Sir Theophilus Jones, and a very conſiderable part of the Army, were reſolved to Aſſiſt him; That Sir Hardreſs Waller himſelf might in time be drawn drawn to joyn with them, and that he doubted not in a ſhort while to receive good effects of their endeavours.

Dean and Barret ſent back into England with a check.

But in the mean time, upon notice that Dean and Barret were Active to withdraw the affections of the Souldiers from their Duties, they were thereupon ſent away from Scotland with a ſevere Rebuke; The General being unwilling to puniſh them by Impriſonment or any ſeverer courſe, becauſe they came to him on publick Buſineſs.

These Men did much miſchief amongſt the Souldiers, who were many of them by their inveiglements ſeduced; Two Troops of Twiſleton's Regiment of Horſe, Commanded by Aſhley and Dean, refuſed to Joyn with the General, and Thirty three of them were diſmounted, diſarmed, and caſhiered, and Foot-Souldiers put on their Horſes; But Forty of Dean's Troop with their Colours ran into England; And two Companies of Foot of the Regiment which came from St. Johnſtowns, being Quartered at Dunbar, had like to have been betrayed to New-caſtle by one Captain Guillim, who had been lately of that Regiment, and was diſcharged; This Guillim procuring leave to go into England, came to Dunbar, where he made the Souldiers believe that he was by the General reſtored to his Command, and had order to ſecure Captain Thompſon who then Commanded them, and to carry them in Boats to Berwick; Some of the Sergeants ſo far gave Credit to him, that they placed a Guard upon Thompſon, whileſt he in the mean time was hiring Boats to carry them, and was ſo earneſt in it, that he would have taken any, though never ſo leaky, for their Conveyance: This put the Men into ſome Jealouſie, inſomuch, that they deſired to ſee his Orders; whereupon he leap'd upon his Horſe, and ran away.

Capt. Guillim endeavours to betray Two Companies of the General's men, but is found out.

At Sterling, a Troup of Colonel Sanders his Regiment was in the like Diſorder, and about thirty of the men diſmounted, and others put in their places. This obliged the General to be more circumſpect in the reforming his Regiments; ſo that he diſcharged all the Officers whom he any way ſuſpected, and ſent them into England. In Colonel Fairfax his Regiment eighteen Officers were diſplac'd; and in moſt of the reſt, ſome were put out, in all, to the number of ſevenſcore Perſons: Thoſe Regiments wherein leaſt alteration was made, were Talbots, and Reads; the firſt, through the diligence of Hubblethorn, who a while after deſervingly, upon Talbot's joyning with Lambert, had the Regiment conferred upon him; and the latter, by the Care and good Example of the Colonel, who was a Perſon that always loved and eſteemed the General.

The General takes care to reform his Regiments.

Lambert was much troubled when he heard that Morgan had deſerted him, and when Talbot and Clarges came to York, he complained of it as a kind of Breach of Faith, but was quickly by Clarges better ſatisfied: for he aſſured him, he heard him move General Monk to a Peace with him; but being Major-General of that Army, he could not refuſe to do his Duty, in ſtaying there where his charge was, ſince the Difference between the two Armies was not yet come to that Degree, to make it beyond hopes of Reconciliation; and that he might rather further the ſame by his Preſence, than Abſence.

Clarges excuſes Major Gen. Morgan to Lambert.

Clarges, as hath been already mentioned, had received a Letter to the Lord Fairfax, from the General, and ſome Inſtructions to Reſſiter, and ſeveral others; about which he was ſecretly to confer with Bowles the Miniſter at York, to whom alſo he brought a Letter of Credit, for what he ſhould propoſe to him; Bowles, with whom he had much Diſcourſe, deſired to be fully informed of the Generals Intentions, and was by Clarges ſo well ſatisfied in them, that he undertook to negotiate with the Lord Fairfax, Colonel Bethel, and ſeveral others in Monks behalf; and for Evidence of it, he adviſed him to ſtay privately in York, till he went to confer with the Lord Fairfax at his Houſe at Nunn-Appleton, ſix miles from thence, (that he might know what Advice to ſend into Scotland) which he accordingly did. And at his Return, acquainted him, That Fairfax would riſe by the midſt of January, and he might be confident Bethel and Smithſon would joyn with him, who were men of good Intereſt, and well-beloved of the Souldiery in Lamberts Army: On the other ſide, Bowles preſſed to know what Expectations the General had from other places, and was by Clarges informed, that Col. Whetham at Portſmouth was a great Friend to the General, and he doubted not, but he would take the firſt Opportunity he could, to declare with that Garriſon for him; which he liked very well, for Whetham was a moderate man. He told him likewiſe, that Colonel Hacker with his Regiment would raiſe ſome men in Nottinghamſhire and Leiceſterſhire, and Colonel Hutchinſon, and Sir Arthur Haſlerig would joyn with them; and that Okey was labouring to make Diſturbances in London amongſt the Regiments there. Bowles at firſt was not well pleaſed that he ſhould make uſe of theſe Aids: But when he was acquainted by Clarges with the Reaſons which induced him to it, he was ſatisfied.

Clarges his Conference with Mr. Bowles.

The firſt thing the General deſign'd was to break Lamberts Forces, to make himſelf Maſter of all the Armies; and to effect this, it was requiſite to refuſe no help, ſince the Major Part of the whole would be ſuch as he could make uſe of to model the reſt, to any purpoſe he ſhould imploy them in. Then they found out a ſecret Meſſenger to ſend with intimation of this Conference to Monk; And Clarges went towards Lincolnſhire to purſue his Negotiations: but about Doncaſter he had ſo grievous a fall from his Horſe, as he was riding Poſt, that his Life was deſpaired of; but after a little ſtay there, he was brought to a Village betwixt Tuxford and Newark, where he was forced to ſtay ten days ere he was able to travel; nevertheleſs, in the mean time he ſent Expreſſes ſeveral ways, and by the means of one Briſtow, a Confident of Colonel Roſſiters, he had opportunity to ſend to him, and had his Anſwer; which was, That he would joyn with Fairfax, and do what he ſhould direct. When he came to Leiceſterſhire, he heard nothing of Haſlerig, but that he had, in deſpair of doing any thing, retired to Woodſtock; and the Reaſon he gave for it, was, That if he ſhould raiſe Forces in his County, it might give occaſion to the Kings Party to Arm, and thereby hazard the whole Cauſe; and that therefore it would be better to cloſe with the Army in all their Exorbitances, than venture with ſo much danger to oppoſe it.

Clarges deals with the Members of the late Council of State, to abet Monk's Deſigns againſt Lambert.

Clarges was ſomewhat troubled at this Diſcouragement, but omitted not to proceed in his Endeavours; and thereupon ſent to many of the Council of State, who were retired, to draw them privately to London, to aſſiſt with their Counſels, in promoting the Reſtauration of the Parliament; which he did upon Obſervation amongſt the Souldiers of Lambert's Army, that they favoured much the Declaration of Monk, for reſtoring that Authority, and were only diverted from joyning with him againſt Lambert, upon a Jealouſie of the Kings being in the Bottom of his Deſign; which was often inſinuated by the Council of Officers at London, in their publick and private Debates: So that in the immaturity of that time, nothing could more advance Monk's purpoſe of ſubduing the Engliſh Army, than to beget a Confidence in them of his adherence to his Declaration.

A Conference between Monk and the Commiſſioners of the Independent Churches.

This Practice prevailed ſo far, as to get the Council of State together in London, where they had many private Meetings: But in the mean time, the Commiſſioners for the Independent Churches, which were ſent into Scotland, were ſolicitous to divert Monk from the proſecution of the War; and ſo far the Buſineſs proceeded, that there was a Conference appointed with them at Haly-rood-houſe, where were preſent to treat with them, General Monk, Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Syler, Doctor Barrow the Judge Advocate of the Army, and Mr. Gumble one of the Generals Chaplains.

At this Conference, Mr. Collins an Independent Miniſter (who had been one of the Preachers of the late Council in Scotland) was admitted to be preſent as a Neuter.

The effect of Mr. Caryl's Speech in the name of the Churches.

Mr. Caryl was the firſt that ſpoke, who in a long and ſtudied Speech declared, That the Commiſſioners had deſired him to ſpeak for them; That they all came, not to deliver their own Senſe of the Generals Proceedings, but the Senſe of the Churches, (for ſo upon every occaſion he called the Independent Congregations) That the Churches had not given them Commiſſion to enter into the Merits of the Cauſe, nor to Debate whether Lamberts Action of turning out the Parliament were juſtifiable or not; but only to preſent it to his Lordſhip, as their Opinion; That though that Action could not be juſtified, yet his Lordſhip had not a Call to appear againſt it, in that manner that he then did; That his Lordſhip had only in Charge to keep Scotland in quiet, and was not bound to take notice of any Differences that ſhould happen in England. (Nor indeed could it reaſonably be expected of him, he being in a place where he could not be ſuppoſed to have ſuch true and timely Information, as was neceſſary in a Buſineſs of that Concernment,) He proceeded to ſhew Reaſons, why the General ſhould go on no further, telling him, That it would put a ſtrife amongſt thoſe that hitherto had been Brethren engaged all along in the ſame Cauſe, Partakers in the ſame Dangers, and the ſame Succeſſes, amongſt thoſe that ſtill in their Papers, and all their Addreſſes, called and owned one another for Brethren, and that at a very unſeaſonable time, whileſt the Canaanites and Perizzites were in the Land: And thereupon he took occaſion, to inlarge himſelf upon all the Advantages the King and his Party would reap by this Quarrel, and all the Dangers the People of God (for ſo he called his own Party) might run into; And at laſt, by way of Aggravation, he told the General, That what Inconveniencies ſoever ſhould happen, would be laid at his Door; in regard he would appear to have been the Beginner of the War.

The General's Anſwer.

At this the General, in a little heat, interrupted him, ſhewing, That the War was already begun by Lambert and his Party, who had offered violence to thoſe, from whom they had all received their Commiſſions; not ſparing freely and at large to lay open their reſtleſs Inſtability, which would not ſuffer the Three Nations to enjoy any ſettled Government at all, but kept them in a perpetual Circumvolution, till they were in danger to be brought to utter Ruine; repeating much of their Declarations, and many of their Actions; and declaring, That if they continued in that Courſe, he was reſolved to oppoſe them to the uttermoſt, and would (to repeat his own words) lay them on their Backs.

Caryl and his Fellow-Commiſſioners endeavoured to excuſe that Expreſſion of theirs, which ſtirred up the Generals Anger; and Barrow, one the Generals ſide, did qualifie and mitigate his Anſwer. not thinking it meet wholly to diſoblige ſo conſiderable a Party as the Independents, as things ſtood at that time; and ſo by degrees Expreſſions came to be very calm on both ſides, both being in Expectation of the Iſſue of the Treaty then on foot, between the Commiſſioners of the Army of Scotland, and thoſe of the Army in England; but after this time there was no more Meetings, for upon News from England, that Matters were tending to Accommodation, theſe Commiſſioners thought their Buſineſs done, and made haſte to return to London.

The Treaty ended between the Commiſſioners of the two Armies.

Clarges, diſabled by his Fall, could not get ſoon enough to London, to prevent the haſty Concluſion of the Treaty there, (which was concluded on the fifteenth of November) although he endeavoured by ſeveral Letters to Major Knight, one of the Commiſſioners, to prevent it, foraſmuch as the reſt of them were ſo prevailed on by the Importunity of the Engliſh Officers, or elſe ſo terrified with their great Preparations, that he could not hinder the ſpeed of it: As he came to London, he paſſed by Cambridge, and ſettled there a Correſpondency with Mr. Pradman, one of the Fellows of Kings-Colledge, by whoſe Care and Secrecy all his Packets were conveyed ſafe to Scotland, when all the ordinary Ways were obſtructed. Mean while, being much troubled to find, that that very Night he arrived at London, the Treaty betwixt the Commiſſioners on both parts was concluded, he ſeriouſly expoſtulated with the Commiſſioners about about their precipitant proceeding, telling them what Progress he had made in his Negotiations, and that by the midst of January there would be in many Places such strong Diversions made, that the General could not but obtain his Ends: That his Money would last till the begining of February, and by that means his Men would be so united and encouraged, that if he did nothing but lye still, Lambert's Army by their great wants (which made them insupportable to the Country) must break of themselves.

Knight was very sensible of his Error in this hasty Conclusion, and the rest were so far convinced, That in their Letter of the sixteenth of November, to the General-Council of the Officers of the Army in Scotland, giving them an Accompt of the Conclusion of the Treaty, They confess, they had exceeded their Instructions, out of a Suspicion, as the Posture of Affairs then stood, That the Issue of the Difference, if longer continued, would not be to the Advantage of themselves, or of their Brethren of England, but of the Common Enemy.

The Agreement it self consisted of Nine Articles, which were expressed in the following words, Viz.

The Articles of Agreement between the Commissioners of the two Armies.

1. That We will, to the uttermost of our Powers, in our several Capacities, oppose the Interest and pretended Right of Charles Stewart, in and to the Government of these Nations, as also of all and every Person claiming a Right or Title to the said Government, or any share therein; together with, under, or from him, or any other Person or Persons pleading or pretending such a Right or Title, by vertue of his or their Descent from the same Line with him.

2. That we will not give our Consent unto, but will oppose to our utmost Power, the setting up of any Single Person whatsoever, in the Place of, and for the Chief Magistrate of these Nations; and will endeavour to our utmost, That the Government of these Nations may be settled in the way of a Free-State, or Common-wealth, without a Single Person, Kingship, or House of Lords.

3. That no Form of Government shall be determined of, and asserted by any part of the Army, as the Supreme Legislative Authority of this Common-wealth, and the Territories thereunto belonging, without the Approbation and Consent of a General-Council of the Officers of the Army and Navy of this Common-wealth; which General-Council shall consist of two Commission-Officers for each respective Regiment, chosen by the Commission-Officers of the said Regiment, or by the major part of them, who can conveniently meet together; and likewise such Governours of Garrisons, as are not Regimented, and can conveniently be spared, may be called to the said Council, and ten Officers of the Fleet, chosen by a Council of the Officers of the Fleet; And that the Quorum shall be Thirty one, and the Day of their Meeting to be the Sixth of December next at White-Hall in the Old Council Room.

4. That a Parliament, or a Supreme Delegated Authority of this Common-wealth, be with all possible speed Constituted and Summoned in such manner and form, as shall be by the aforesaid General-Council agreed unto; and the Qualifications of the Members thereof, to be agreed on by the Lord St. John, the Lord Warriston, Lieutenant-General Ludlow, Sir Henry Vane, Lord Whitlock, Sir James Harrington, Major Salway, Colonel George Thompson, Colonel Berry, and Mr. Scot; together with the Lord Steel, Colonel Barrow, and Lieutenant-Colonel Dobson, as Commissioners for the Army in Ireland; and three Commissioners for the Army in England, to be appointed thereunto; with the three Commissioners for the Army of Scotland, whereof the Quorum to be Nine.

5. That the Proportian of Money out of the Assessments of England, formerly appointed for the Supply of the Forces of Scotland, be duly paid, and no further stop upon the same, but that it may be returned by Bills of Exchange, or otherwise with all convenient speed, and any former Order and Orders to be made void.

6. That the Case of Officers of the Army of England and Scotland, that are suspended or displaced, or that have laid down their Commissions since the Eleventh of October last, only by reason of of the precedent Differences, be determined by fourteen Commissioners of the Army in England and Scotland, or the major part of them; the one half of the said Commissioners to be chosen by the Council of Officers in England, and the other half of the Council of Officers in Scotland; and that forthwith the said Officers be discharged from their Imprisonments or Confinements. The Day of Meeting of the said Commissioners, to be the first Day of December next, and the place of their Meeting to be at Newcastle upon Tyne.

7. That no Officer, or Souldier, or other Person of these Nations, that have acted in the late Differences betwixt the late Parliament and the Army, or between any of the Forces of this Common-wealth, for or against each other, relating to any Difference, since the tenth of October last, be questioned for the same, but fully Indemnified, and all Unkindness to be put in perpetual Oblivion.

8. That a Godly, Learned, and Faithful Ministry, with competent Maintenance, and other Incouragement, be continued in the Three Nations; and that the Universities and Schools of Learning be so Countenanced and Reformed, as that they may become the Nurseries of Piety and Learning.

9. That the Forces of Horse and Foot respectively, both of England and Scotland, that have been drawn forth by reason of the late difference, shall forthwith March to such Quarters in both Nations where they may best secure and preserve the Peace of the Common-wealth against the Enemies thereof; and that there be no further difference or appearance of difference amongst Us.

We the Commissioners hereunto appointed and authorized by General Monk, and the General Council of Officers in Scotland, do this fifteenth of November, 1659. in the name, and on the behalf of the said General Monk, and General Council of Officers in Scotland, fully Consent and agree to the aforementioned Agreement, and every part thereof, and do engage our ſelves and every of us to the full performance of the ſame.

Wallington and Lloyd, Two Captains of the Engliſh Army at London, were ſent with this Agreement to General Monk to put it in execution; and as they went, Major Cambridge of Lambert's Army was ſent by him in their Company. But Clarges was careful to ſend a Copy of it to him ſome days before they arrived; and the General was in much perplexity at the Receipt of it, as that which diſtracted his Deſign almoſt paſt recovery; he was reſolved not to accept of it, but could not well tell how to decline it.

The General Conſults how he might with the handſomeſt pretenſe refuſe his Aſſent to theſe Articles.

To take any pretenſe from thoſe Articles which excluded the Kings Government, would confirm the ſuſpicion which was fomented of his ſecret Intentions for the Royal Family; and to ground his diſſent from the Subſcription of the Commiſſioners, where they aſſume an authority (which they never had) and undertook for the performance of that Agreement for the General and all his Officers, would not be thought material enough to continue the breach betwixt them: That which was moſt plauſible, was to break it upon the Sixth Article, where it was provided, That all the Officers diſplaced by General Monk might be in a Capacity of being reſtored to other Commands; and all thoſe put by him in their places (wherein his ſtrength conſiſted) be removed; He called together a few of his Confidents to adviſe what to do; Theſe were Major General Morgan, Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Lydcott, Doctor Barrow, and Mr. Gumble; Lydcott was admitted, becauſe he was from a private Captain newly preferred to the Command of Cobbet's Regiment, and therefore by intereſt ſuppoſed to be averſe to this Agreement. The General and theſe Gentlemen having had much diſcourſe of the Buſineſs, They all thought it fit to diſapprove of the Agreement, but differed in the manner; but at laſt it was by Barrow propoſed, and agreed to by the General and the reſt, That they ſhould not declare a poſitive diſſent to what their Commiſſioners had done; but urge, That there was ſomething untreated of, further to be agreed upon; and ſome of thoſe things conſented to by their Commiſſioners, which without further explication, could not ſtand with their Declaration or Inſtructions; and that therefore it ſhould be deſired, that two more might be allowed to be added to their Commiſſioners, to meet a like number of theirs to be thereunto authorized, to put a more abſolute period to their differences.

Lloyd and others ſent with a Letter to the Officers at London.

The ſame Evening, Wallington, Lloyd, and Cambridge arrived; and the next morning at a General Council of Officers at Edenburgh, when the Agreement was communicated to them, they were ſo artificially prepared, that they unanimouſly diſrelliſhed it, and a Letter was framed, which they all ſubſcribed, to the ſame purpoſe with what was agreed on the day before, and Lloyd and thoſe with him went with it to London.

Mr. Atkins and Colonel Markham ſent by the General with a Letter to the City of London.

The City of London was very much diſcontented at the Committee of Safety, and Fleetwood became doubtful of them: But to heighten them the more, General Monk ſent a Letter to the Lord Mayor and Common Council, which was delivered to them by Mr. Atkins, and Colonel Markham, about the 17th or 18th of November: Wherein he acquainted them,

The Effect of the ſaid Letter.

That at the firſt notice he had of the Force upon the Parliament, he had ſent a Letter to them, declaring his Reſolution to endeavour their Re-eſtabliſhment, and that his Army was very Unanimous to concur with him in it; but that Letter miſcarrying, he had with the advice of his Officers now again written to them, to let them know, they were conſtant to their firſt Reſolution; and were the more confirmed in it, for being informed that the Authors of that Force had proceeded ſo far, as to null and make void ſome Acts of Parliament, (which the King when he was at the higheſt never attempted to do, and which no true Engliſhman can endure to ſee done by any but Parliaments themſelves) and after they had ſubverted the Foundation of an ancient Government, were contriving by their own Power and Authority to ſet up a new Government over the Nations. Adding, That if this ſhould be ſuffered, he knew not to what purpoſe ſo much Blood had been ſpilt, ſo much Treaſure ſpent, and ſo many Engagements made; They muſt take upon themſelves the Guilt of all, and look upon this Slavery they had brought upon themſelves, as a Judgment upon them for their Murthers, Rapines, and Perjuries: He protested to aim only at the reſtoring Parliaments to their former Freedom and Authority, and the People to their Juſt Rights and Liberties; in which he expected to be ſure of their Aſſiſtance. As to Religion, he told them, he intended not that thoſe that truly feared God ſhould be abridged of their Worſhip, but he ſhould be unwilling that ſome under Pretenſe of maintaining that Liberty, ſhould endeavour the overthrow of National Miniſtry, and by conſequence leave the greateſt part of the People to utter Ignorance and Atheiſm: Concluding nevertheleſs, That Religion was not that about which he did at preſent contend, being deſirous to leave that to the Conſideration of the Parliament, for the Defence whereof, he and thoſe with him were reſolved to venture to the utmoſt; and if he ſhould miſcarry through want of their timely aid, it would be too late for them by their own own ſtrength to aſſert their Freedom: And if he ſucceeded, it would be diſhonourable for ſo Famous a City, and ſo much Concerned, that its Liberty ſhould be aſſerted without its own help; inciting them therefore now whileſt ſo great an Army is waiting on him in the North, to uſe their Endeavours in the South, &c.

The Letter look't upon as fictitious, and the Meſſengers impriſoned.

This Letter was dated the 12th of November at Edenburgh, and did ſo much incenſe the Committee of Safety, that the Gentlemen who delivered it were put into Cuſtody: And the more to aggravate the buſineſs, Monk's Commiſſioners were either ſo imprudent, or ſo unſincere, as to declare, That they believed the Letter was fictitious; Which made the City leſs Active in purſuance of the Contents of it.

Whileſt things were thus traverſed in London, Fleetwood, Lambert, and all the Officers in England, could not diſſemble their Confuſion of Mind, upon Monk's refuſal to ratifie the Treaty, and ſending for a Blank Paſs to inſert new names of additional Commiſſioners; and many Expoſtulatory Letters paſſed betwixt them about it, but more eſpecially betwixt Lambert and his Officers, and him; for they were very apprehenſive, that this Motion of a Blank Paſs for adding to their Commiſſioners, or the naming of new ones, was only meant to gain time; but at laſt they did conſent to it, though it never came to any effect, as ſhall be hereafter diſcovered.

Nine of the Old Council of State meet

Nine of the old Council of State met privately in London the 19th of November, they a little reſented, that General Monk's Commiſſioners did not Communicate their Counſels with them, yet omitted not to give him all the encouragement they could; And in order thereunto, one Captain Elms, with Horton a Servant of Sir Arthur Haſlerig's was ſent with a Letter to him to Scotland; Wherein they ſignified,

And ſend a Letter to the General.

That his Faithful Actions in diſcharge of his Truſt and Duty to that Parliament, and for the good of the Three Nations and Poſterity in theſe times of ſo great Hypocriſie and Defection, was moſt gratefully acknowledged by them; and they aſſured him, his Service was exceedingly well reſented by all ſober and intereſſed perſon, that love a Common-wealth; and that he might be Confident, that they would adhere to him, and to their utmoſt promote the good Cauſe which he had hitherto with ſo much Wiſdom and Courage highly owned, and that it was their Reſolution to ſtand and fall with him in defence thereof; and that they would, as occaſion ſhould offer it ſelf, the Lord enabling, be aſſiſting to him according to his Declaration for removing the Force from this Parliament, that ſo they may Sit with Freedom, and, by Gods bleſſing, lay a Foundation of a happy and laſting Settlement.

This was a great Encouragement to the Officers in Scotland; for the wiſeſt of them did conclude from theſe appearances of Action at London, that their Party was increaſed in England, Imagining that otherwiſe they durſt not have ſo openly acted.

The Parliament Party begin buſily to appear againſt Lambert and his Faction.

Colonel Whetham at Portſmouth was labouring to frame a Deſign of declaring for General Monk with that Garriſon; And Colonel Morley, Walton, and Haſlerig went privately towards him to Treat about it: But before they went, The Council of State, at another meeting before the time appointed by Parliament for their Continuance was expired, framed a Commiſſion, wherein they Conſtituted General Monk abſolute Commander in Chief of all the Armies in England and Scotland, which was Dated the 24th of November, Sealed with their Seal, and left in the hands of Clarges, till a ſafe Meſſenger might be ſent with it to him.

As ſoon as Fleetwood had received General Monk's Letters againſt the Ratification of the Treaty, and his deſire to have Two more Commiſſioners added to his, to renew the Treaty at New-Caſtle, Wilkes, Cloeberry, and Knight, the Commiſſioners, had their diſpatch, and a Paſs to licence their repair thither; But before they got to New-Caſtle, at a Meeting of all Lambert's Officers, a Letter was framed, and ſent by Colonel Zanchy to General Monk's Officers, and one from Lambert to the General himſelf.

The Effect of a Letter from *Lambert*s Officers to Monks.

In that from the Officers they write, That they had adviſed their General to acquaint General Monk, that if he pleaſed to appoint two Commiſſioned Officers of his Army to be added to thoſe already in England, and ſignifie their names to him, a ſafe Conduct ſhould be forthwith given to them; but withal, That nothing in the Agreement be parted from, nor any new matter, or further explanations admitted, which are not conſentaneous to what is already concluded; And that the General Council (agreed upon in the third Article of the Agreement at London) to meet upon the ſixth of December, may accordingly hold their meeting. And in a Poſtſcript to this Letter, they complained of the detention of Colonel Cobbet, who, they ſaid, was a publick Meſſenger, and deſired therefore he might enjoy his Priviledge accordingly, except by ſome miſcarriage he had forfeited the ſame. Colonel Zanchy was very kindly received by General Monk and all his Officers, and they met together with all convenient haſte to give him his diſpatch; acquainting him, That they ſhould not diſown any thing in that Agreement that was conformable to the Inſtructions by which their Commiſſioners were authorized; but what ſhould appear to be beyond, they inſiſted to have it Treated on and explained; As to the third Article, mentioned in their Letter, they would not admit of any meeting in purſuance of it, till the whole ſhould be concluded. And concerning Cobbet, they alledged, That he came not to Scotland as a publick Meſſenger, but as a Colonel to Command a Regiment after his Commiſſion had been vacated by the Parliament, (the day before their Interruption) and without any leave from General Monk; And that the General had intimation from a Perſon of Credit, That he had a deſign to ſeduce the Army from their obedience, if not to ſeize on his Perſon. This Letter was ſigned the 7th of December at night, and the next day Colonel Zanchy was to have returned with it to Newcaſtle; but upon Intelligence received, that a Party of Lamberts, conſiſting of three Regiments of Horſe, and a Regiment of Dragoons, with two Drakes, was marched into Northumberland, and that ſixty Dragoons had poſſeſſed themſelves of Chillingham Caſtle, near the Scotch Borders, the Colonel was ſtaid; and the General, at three of the Clock the next morning, marched out of Berwick, and ſent order to draw his Forces together towards Cold-ſtream, a very convenient Paſs upon the Tweed, where he ſettled his Head Quarters. A little before this, his own Commiſſioners were come to him to Berwick, where he confined Col. Wilkes for diſcovering, or at leaſt not purſuing ſome private Inſtructions; but after a while he was releaſed, upon ſatisfaction that what he did was out of Ignorance, and not malice.

Col. Whetham at Portſmouth declares for Monk.

Colonel Whetham at Portſmouth, very generouſly declared for General Monk with that Garriſon, after he had ſecured Captain Peacock, and Captain Brown, and ſome other refractory Officers, that he was jealous of.

Commiſſioners from the ſeveral Shires and Buroughs of Scotland wait upon the General at Berwick.

Commiſſioners from the ſeveral Shires and Buroughs of Scotland, being ſummoned to wait upon the General, and he having appointed them to be at Barwick the thirteenth of December, he came on that day thither to meet them accordingly, releaſing Zanchy, and ſending by him a Letter to Lambert, wherein he acquainted him, he would by the next Poſt more fully inform him of his Reſolutions.

The Scotch Commiſſioners appointed five to attend the General, and treat with him, which were the Earls of Glencarne, Rothes, Weam's, and Eglinton, and Mr. Alexander Bruce. Theſe preſented a Paper to the General, conſiſting of five Propoſals.

Their Propoſitions.

1. That the Lord General may be pleaſed to appoint a Committee in each Shire, for regulating the Affairs thereof, in order to his Lordſhips Commands, and their own preſervation.

2. That his Lordſhip will allow each Shire preſently to raiſe (for ſecuring the Peace, and their own ſafety) ſome ſmall proportion of Horſes, under the Conduct of ſuch Perſons as his Lordſhip ſhall think fit to truſt.

3. That his Lordſhip will declare, for the greater Encouragement of the Shires, at the return of their Commiſſioners, if the Treaty ſhall break up, and take no effect, immediately upon the notice thereof, that he did authorize the Shires to put themſelves in the beſt poſture they can for his Aſſiſtance, and their own defence.

4. That for the ſaid effect, his Lordſhip will be pleaſed to furniſh each Shire with ſome proportion of Arms, upon payment of juſt Rates thereof, within one Months time after the Receipt of them.

5. That all Gentlemen who are free to comply with his Lordſhips deſires, may for themſelves and Servants, have liberty to carry their Arms.

The General, upon the receipt of this Paper, adviſed with ſome ſelect Officers about an Anſwer to it (viz.) Colonel Fairfax, Major Jeremiah Smith, Colonel Lydcott, Colonel Read, and Doctor Barrow. And the chief Queſtion debated on was, whether they ſhould permit the Scots to Arm for their Aſſiſtance? Colonel Read was for Arming them, He Argued, That it was a common danger, and they ought to make uſe of any aid that could be obtained for their defence. The General himſelf told them, That if he ſhould draw all the men from his Garriſons, he could make his numbers of Foot quickly equal to Lambert, but he had hitherto declined that, being unwilling to put Scotland out of Engliſh hands, and that he doubted not, if he could get a few more Horſe than he had, even with thoſe Foot he had without weakening his Garriſons, he ſhould well enough defend himſelf againſt Lambert.

The General adviſeth with his Officers about them.

Others were of opinion, That although they ſhould not imploy whole Troops, or Companies of Scots, yet they might ſafely mingle a good party of them with the Engliſh. But Doctor Barrow was againſt all motions of Arming the Scots at that time, believing if it were done, many of their own men might deſert them; But if the General would take any opportunity, though it were but to beat up any of Lamberts Quarters, ſo that they might once come to Bloud, that the diviſion being likely to increaſe after ſuch an action, he might then ſtrengthen himſelf with what Acceſſions he pleaſed. Nevertheleſs, he moved that ſome privately might confer with the leading men of the Scotch Gentry, to try if they would be brought to provide any numbers of Horſes, on which the General might mount Engliſh to reinforce his own Troops. This laſt was approved as to the main Queſtion; but upon the whole debate, they agreed upon particular Anſwers to every Article, in the Generals name.

The Generals Anſwer to the Scots Propoſitions.

1. To the Firſt, That he would authorize the Noblemen and Juſtices of the Peace of each County, with the Advice and Conſent of the Governour of the next adjacent Garriſon, to put in execution ſuch Orders and Commands as his Lordſhip ſhall give for ſecuring the Peace of the County.

2. To the ſecond, That he would allow the Counties next adjacent to the High-Lands, viz. to the County of Dumbarton and Sterling, Forty men to bear Arms; To the County of Perth, Forty men in Arms; To the County of Forfar and Kinkardine, Forty men in Arms; And to the County of Aberdeen, Forty men in Arms, which are to be a Guard for the ſecurity of the ſaid Counties againſt Thieves and Robbers. And for the reſt of the Shires, his Lordſhip would take care, if he ſhould have occaſion to remove farther out of Scotland: And he would allow the Heretors of the above named Shires, to make choice of a fit Perſon to Command the ſaid reſpective Guards; They giving Security to the Governour of the next adjacent Garriſon, for their Fidelity and good behaviour, in Six hundred Pounds Sterling.

3. To the third, His Lordſhip deferr'd his Anſwer, till the Iſſue of the Treaty now intended intended between him and the Engliſh Army.

4. To the Fourth, That he would furniſh them with fit means for their defence, whenſoever he ſhould apprehend their Peace and Safty to be in eminent danger.

5. To the Fifth, Such Noblemen and Gentlemen as ſhould ſubſcribe to live peaceably, and act nothing to the prejudice of England, ſhould have liberty with Paſſes to wear their Swords, and have four Servants Armed for their Attendants.

Glencarn's Arguments to the General, for arming the Scots to his aſſiſtance.

At a Conference with the Scotch Commiſſioners, upon the delivery of theſe Anſwers to their Propoſitions, they ſeemed unſatisfied with them, and the Earl of Glencarne, in the name of the reſt, told the General, Since they were willing to hazard their Perſons and Eſtates with him, They hoped he would not deny them to Arm for his Aſſiſtance, and their own ſafety, ſince if he ſhould engage and be worſted, they ſhould be expoſed to great ruine for their Affection and reſpect to him, from which otherwiſe, by a Neutrality, they might be ſecure. To which he anſwered, That if that ſhould happen, they ſhould then Arm to what numbers they pleaſed. To this the Earl replied, That the Country were now willing to riſe in Confidence of his Conduct and Courage: But if his force ſhould be defeated, they would not be perſwaded to it. And beſides, they could not under ſix weeks time make their Levies. And if permiſſion were now denied, the Enemy, if Victorious, would be in their bowels, before they ſhould be in a poſture of Defence.

The Scotch Nobility depart home from Barwick.

The cautious General would not be prevailed on with theſe Arguments, and ſo they departed, he returned to Coldſtream to his Quarters, and the Scotch Noblemen and Gentlemen to their ſeveral Countries.

They had abſolutely refuſed the raiſing any Horſe to mount Engliſh, yet this came to no breach between them and the General, in regard, before they left Barwick, the General acquainted them with Intelligence he had received from England, of the diſtractions in the Engliſh Armies and other affairs, which made them to fear leſs than before their own Peace at home, and ſo all parted with mutual reſpect.

The General prepares to make defence againſt Lambert, if occaſion were.

After this meeting, the General was contriving how to break off the Treaty with Lambert, which he had hitherto not without great Artifice delayed; but he conſidered, that as ſoon as that ſhould be done, Lambert would march towards him, and therefore he made preparation to fight him, if occaſion ſhould urge him to it. In order to which, he ſent an expreſs to Clarges, to provide him ſome good Horſe-Officers, and ſend them by Sea in a nimble Barke. Mean while, in Northumberland the Oagles raiſed him two compleat Troops, and more Horſe were raiſing. He increaſed his number of Pikes in each Company, to be equal to his Muſquets, as thereby to be better able to make defence againſt Horſe, in which Lamberts greateſt ſtrength was placed.

What advantages he had againſt Lamberts Army.

Coldſtream was nine miles from Barwick upon the Tweed, and he had Quartered all his men ſo conveniently, that he could draw them all together in ſix hours; for the Villages are much thicker upon the Scotch than Engliſh Borders. And if Lambert marched towards him, the Villages in Northumberland being thin, he muſt have Quartered at ſuch diſtance, that his men would have been expoſed to great hazard of being often diſturbed in their Quarters. And if he had marched to fight; the General, being upon the defenſive part, could have brought as many hands to action as he. Or if he had marched to Carliſle, to have invaded Scotland that way; Monk would then have marched directly to London, and ſhould have been two or three days march before him. Or if he had divided his Army, the General would have preſently fallen on the neareſt part to him. In this poſture he lay at Coldſtream, when he received Intelligence from Clarges,

A Letter of Advice from Monk to Lambert.

Upon Receipt of these Letters, the General writ to Lambert, by Major Bannister, one of the Officers at Barwick, acquainting him, That since his last by Zanchy, he had certain Advice That three of the Commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament, for the Government of the Army, were now in Portsmouth, acting by vertue of the same Authority, upon which he Acted, and declaring for the same ends; And that he and the Army were thereby obliged in Honour and Duty, to take their Advice and Consent in all Affairs that relate to the Cause they are now engaged in, which he doubted not, but he would judge reasonable and necessary; and therefore he desired a safe Conduct for the Major, to acquaint them with what had passed in the several Overtures betwixt them; but withall, he told him freely, he could not think it adviseable to proceed further in Treaty (and he expected the other Commissioners would be of the same mind) till he remanded all those Troops he had sent into Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmerland, during that time.

The Treaty between Monk and Lambert broke off.

Lambert upon advice with his Officers, would not let Bannister pass, but sent him back to Barwick; for he now began plainly to perceive, that the General intended nothing less than to treat further; whereupon both sides prepared for War: But Lambert was so daily Alarm'd with the success of the Commissioners at Portsmouth, and the daily submission of several Troops and Companies of men, That he thought it more necessary to march Southward to assist his Friends in London, than hazard Battel with General Monk.

Lamberts Party daily decrease upon the appearance of the Portsmouth Commissioners.

Fleetwood, and the rest of the Committee of Safety were in no less disorder than Lambert, but that which most amused them, was the Declaration of Lawson with his Fleet for the Parliament (which was chiefly transacted by the endeavours of Colonel Streater, an active Instrument for the King in all these Revolutions, who was forc'd to fly thither upon discovery of a design he had to seize on the Tower) for they thought themselves sure of Lawson, and by his defection (added to the rest) their Authority came to be generally despised, even by their own Souldiers, so that they abandoned all; and Fleetwood, with great contrition and submission, in behalf of his Confederates, sent to the Speaker to desire him to send to the rest of the Parliament Members, and with them to return to the exercise of their Trust and Power for the Government of the Nation; acknowledging, That the Lord had blasted their Counsels, and (to repeat his own words) spit in their faces.

Fleetwood submits, and desires the Members to sit again.

Upon this, several Members met privately in the Speakers House, and gave Colonel Okey, Colonel Markham, Colonel Allured, and Colonel Moss, orders to draw the Regiments about Westminster to a Rendezvouz in Lincolns-Inn-fields; which being performed accordingly, the Souldiers declared to live and die with the Parliament, and marched down Chancery-Lane, where at the Rolls they made a halt till the Speaker came to them, and received their acknowledgments, and from thence by his Orders, they went to their Quarters, having first from him received the Word.

Several Regiments, being drawn up in Lincolns-Inn-fields, declare for the late Members.

And two daies after, that is to say, on the 26th of December, in the Evening, the Speaker and the Members of Parliament, resumed the Government, and sate in the Parliament-House, having met first in White-Hall in the Council-Chamber, from whence they went on foot through Chanon-Row (the Mace being carried before the Speaker) to Westminster-Hall, where as they pass'd, the Souldiers upon the Guard stood in Ranks, and made acclamations. At their first meeting, They Ordered Colonel Alexander Popham, Col. Thompson, Mr. Scot, Colonel Okey, Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Colonel Matthew Allured, and Colonel Markham, or any three of them, to order, direct, and Conduct the Forces of the Army, and all other Forces, and to Command the same to suppress all Tumults, Insurrections, and Rebellions, and all such Forces which shall oppose or resist the Command of the Parliament, and to observe such Orders and Directions as they should receive from time to time from the Parliament, or the Commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament, to Command the Army, or any three of them, till they shall come to London or Westminster, or untill the Parliament shall take further order.

They take their Seats again in the Parliament-House.

They order seven Commissioners for the management of the Army.

From these Commissioners an Order was sent to Lambert to disperse his Forces, but they were upon breaking before notice thereof came to him.

We made some relation of a Treaty betwixt Mr. Evelyn and Colonel Morley, which at this time Mr. Evelyn thought to bring to some advantageous issue, for Morley upon this change had his Regiment restored, and with it the Government of the Tower conferred on him, and

and his Brother Colonel Fagg had also a Regiment: Mr. Evelyn had done for him towards his Majesty, all he desired, for Pardon of him and his Friends; but when he came to him with the report of it, he was very reserved, and would not entertain any discourse with him of that matter, and after one time would rarely admit him into his company, which made him suspect he had altered his intentions, and put him to the hazardous experiment of a sharp and expostulatory Letter; but he was newly involved with General Monk, and Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper in intrigues of the like nature, which he durst not communicate; and Affairs were not yet mature enough for the things which Mr. Evelyn proposed, nor was he assured of his Officers and Souldiers in the Tower for such a Service: But it is most certain he received such impressions from Mr. Evelyn's former discourses, that he was one of the forwardest of his Party to embrace all occasions for the Kings Service, as was evident by his early, vigorous, and hazardous opposition in Parliament, shortly after their sitting, to that impious Oath of abjuration of the King's Family and Line (hereafter mentioned.)

The Irish Brigade brought off to Monk by Redman and Brett.

When the Parliament thus reconvened, and Lambert in his declension; The Irish Brigade submitted to Redman and Bret, and was brought off by them; and at the same time, the Souldiers of two Dunkirk Regiments, then with Lambert, were in Mutiny for the General, who scarce had received Information of these actings, when Captain Campbell also arrived at Coldstream with Letters from Sir Hardress Waller, and others from Dublin, with Intelligence of the Surprizal of Dublin Castle by Captain Joyer and Captain Bond, which was thus performed; One of Bonds men softly knocking at the Gates, the Sentinel opened the door, and as he opened it, the rest presently rushed in, and on a sudden surprized them within, and seized on Colonel John Jones, Miles Corbet, Colonel Matthew Thomlinson, Colonel Richard Lawrence, Lieutenant Colonel Henry Jones, Mr. Standish the Treasurer, and Tombes the Store-Keeper: The Design was chiefly managed at Dublin by Sir Theophilus Jones, Trevor, the three Warrens, Colonel Bridges, Thompson, Liste, Worder, and Temple, having been two months in Agitation, and was the more dangerous, because but in one of Five Foot Companies that Quartered in the City, they could repose any Confidence; neither durst they Communicate their Intentions with more than one Officer of that Company, and some few Officers of Horse, whom they engaged out of three Troops; and so much they differed about the time of putting the business in execution, that till the night before the Action, they had not resolved it: The pretext made use of for the Business, was their meeting to promote a Petition in the Army to call a General Council; which so dazled the Eyes of the Commander in Chief, and several others of his Confidents, that they suspected no other thing to have been intended. And that which in the Execution was most remarkable, is, that not one drop of Bloud was shed. The next day after, the City of Dublin drew out their Militia, and declared with them; and although they had but eight hours notice, there appeared above two thousand Foot, besides Horse.

The manner of Surprizing Dublin Castle.

Cornet Monk was privy to the Design, and sent to Wexford, Waterford, and those Parts, to incline them to joyn in it: But Sir Charles Coot and his Brothers had the hardest Task in the Province of Connaught; but they overcame all difficulties, and in a very short time brought the whole Souldiery and Garrison there to obedience, and in less than a Weeks space, Limrick, Clonmell, Youghall, Ross, Kilkenny, Drogedah, Dundalk, Antrim, and many other Places declared their Concurrence.

Sir Charles Coot reduceth all Connaught to a Compliance with the present Design.

The General, always carrying an even temper in his behaviour, seem'd not much exalted with this News; yet since it was likely to prove of no small Concernment to himself, he presently dispatch'd Captain Campbell back, with great acknowledgments of these Services, and desired to be supplied by them with six Troops of Horse with all convenient speed: This good news was seconded with advice from Bowles of the Lord Fairfax's Rising in York-shire, which was somewhat sooner than his Promise, but very seasonable to make a diversion to Lambert's Forces, with whom Colonel Lilburn's Regiment joyned by means of Major Smithson, who was a great Lover of General Monk, and Colonel Redman came in to them with the Irish Brigade; Colonel Bethell, Sir Henry Cholmley, Captain Strangwaies, and Mr. Arthington also joyned with them: The said Messenger also informed him, That the Parliament was again Sitting, and that Fleetwood had submitted to them; which made the General immediately March, (for he heard that Lambert kept his Brigade together, and intended to oppose the Lord Fairfax and his Friends, and having quitted New-Castle, was marched towards them;) wherefore on the Second of January at night he advanced with two Regiments of Horse, and two of Foot, and marched to Wooller: He had the day before sent Colonel Knight with three Troops to Morpeth, to whom he that night sent Orders to seize on New-Castle, which he did by six of the Clock the next morning. Major General Morgan was left sick, and Colonel Read, who commanded the Rear of the Army, marched the next day with two Regiments of Horse, and three Regiments of Foot, with which his whole number amounted in all to five thousand Foot, and two thousand Horse. By that time he came to Morpeth, he had information that Lambert's whole Party was of themselves dispersed into several Quarters in Submission to the Parliaments Orders. And to Assure him of the Parliaments Sitting, he received a Letter from the Speaker, dated the 27 of Decemb. of Thanks for his Service; wherein the restitution of their Authority was wholly attributed to his Fidelity, Care, and Courage.

The Lord Fairfax, and several of Monk's Party joyning with him, rise in York-shire.

Gen. Monk begins his March into England.

He receives a Letter of thanks from the Speaker.

The knowledge of this did more than any thing perplex the General, as one of the most fatal accidents that could happen to him; for by their over-hasty resumption of Power, back'd with a great Army newly return'd to their Obedience, he despaired of doing the good he intended to his Country, and thought no

no longer of Continuing in Arms than till a fair Opportunity ſhould be offered him to lay them down and retire, without making them jealous of him; For he expected they would not have thought their Sitting ſafe, till his arrival at London with his Army, and then he would have reſtored all the other Members with them, without undertaking to judge of the Differences betwixt them.

He receives an Addreſs at Morpeth from the City of London by their Sword-Bearer. As likewiſe from the Gentry of the Country in all Parts as he marcht along. He is viſited at York by the Lord Fairfax.

When he came to Morpeth, Mr. William Mann, the Sword-Bearer of London, came to him, with a very reſpectful Letter from the Lord Mayor and Common-Council of London; To which he made a Civil Return the next day from New-Caſtle, and thence he marched with continued Journeys to York, where he continued Five days, and all the way as he marched from Cold-ſtream he was met by the Gentry, and ſaluted by all the People as he paſſed, with great Acclamations of Joy. Colonel Waters the Sheriff of York-ſhire, met him betwixt Allerton and Topcliffe, ſeveral of the Gentry having attended him the day before at his firſt entrance into the County. At York he was Viſited by the Lord Fairfax, whom he received with much Kindneſs and Reſpect, and very civilly acknowledged Mr. Bowles his diligent and induſtrious acting in his Concerns; There he modell'd Lambert's and Lilburn's Regiments of Horſe, and gave the firſt of them to Colonel Bethell, and the latter to Smithſon, and chang'd moſt of the other Officers.

The new reſtored Members begin very Actively in ſettling their Affairs; and on the Second of January they name One and Thirty to be of the Council of State, paſſing an ACT for their Conſtitution, and ſeveral Inſtructions for them to Act by: Amongſt which it was provided, That none ſhould Sit but ſuch as ſhould take an Oath of Abjuration of the King, his Family, and Government.

The Oath was in theſe following words: viz.

The form of an Oath of Abjuration to be taken by all the Members of the Council of State and Parliament.

I do hereby Swear, That I do renounce the pretended Title of Charles Stewart, and the whole Line of the late King James, and of every other Perſon as a Single Perſon pretending, or which ſhall Pretend, to the Crown or Government of theſe Nations of England, Scotland, and Ireland, or any of them, and the Dominions and Territories belonging to them, or any of them; And that I will, by the Grace and Aſſiſtance of Almighty God, be True, Faithful, and Conſtant to the Parliament and Common-Wealth, and will oppoſe the bringing in, or ſetting up any Single Perſon, or Houſe of Lords, and every of them, in this Common-wealth.

This Oath being ſtricter than any that had ever been impoſed, was by many diſliked; However, the Leading Men that promoted it in Parliament, affirmed, That without this, they could have no certain Aſſurance of Power; And that the Hollanders, and thoſe of the Confederated Provinces could never be fix'd in their Government, till they had made a Renunciation of the King of Spain. And to that height this buſineſs was brought, that not thinking it enough for the Council of State, They drove on to have it ordered, That every Member in the Houſe ſhould alſo take the ſaid Oath: This was ſtrongly oppoſed by Colonel Feilder, Weaver, Dove, Hutchinſon, both the Puries, Ingoldsby, and many more of the Soberer ſort, Who alleadged it would be a Confining of Providence to make ſuch an Oath, a Snare to many good men, and a terrour to ſuch as were truly Conſcientious, who might ſuſpect this to be a fore-runner of many Oaths to fetter their Conſciences. Of theſe more moderate ſort of men, Feilder and Ingoldsby only were thought favourers of the Kings Party, but the reſt were ſuch of whom they had no manner of Jealouſie at that time; Though afterwards they appeared much inclined to a Conjunction with the Secluded Members, and well diſpoſed to Monarchy: So that when the Act for the Council of State came to be executed, in that part of it which was the adminiſtration of the Oath, Mr. Weaver, Colonel Morley, Oliver St. John, Colonel Fagg, the Lord Fairfax, and many more, even a third part at leaſt of their number refuſed it, and were therefore not admitted to Sit, and Act.

The Oath oppoſed by ſeveral of the Houſe.

Whileſt the General ſtaid at York, he had Intimation, that Overton was taking Beds into Hull, breaking the Ice in the Grafts, and making ſuch Preparation as if he took him rather for an Enemy than a Friend; wherefore he ſent Major Smith to him, one well known in that Garriſon, to inſpect into the Condition of it, and writ a Letter to Overton, to expoſtulate with him about the Matter: Who returned in Anſwer to him, That he perceived Rumour had rendred Hull as doubtful to him as it had his Deſign dangerous to them and others; but he was glad to hear that he adhered to this Parliament in their preſent Conſtitution, againſt the re-admiſſion of the Secluded Members, a free Parliament, or Single Perſon, one of which had been continually charged upon him by the Common Cry of the Army.

The Leading Members of Parliament, finding this difference growing amongſt themſelves about the Oath of Abjuration, contrived how to draw the General to their Party; and in order thereunto, Scot and Robinſon, two of their Members, were ſent to meet him upon the Way to gratulate his Return, but with private directions to engage him to take the Oath as ſoon as he came to London, before he took his place in the Council of State:

Scot and Robinſon ſent from the Houſe to Compliment and attend General Monk upon his Journey.

Or

Of theſe their Inſtructions Clarges having timely notice, was reſolved to be with the General before them; but before he went, he privately got from Quarter-Maſter-General Butler a Liſt of all the Quarters in London, for a purpoſe which ſhall be diſcovered hereafter.

He diſpoſeth of ſeveral Regiments and Companies as he came along.

On the Twelfth of January, the Houſe, to teſtifie their Confidence in the General, paſſed a Vote, To approve of all he had done in order to the Service of the Parliament; and Ordered their Vote to be Printed: When he removed from York, he ſent one of the Dunkirk Regiments of Foot, Commanded by Colonel Clarke, and Major General Morgans Regiment of Horſe, into Scotland, which, with thoſe he left in Garriſon there, he thought enough to ſecure the Peace of that Kingdom, till time ſhould admit further Conſideration thereof. He left Colonel Fairfax his Regiment at York, and Disbanded ſome Companies of Aſkefield's Regiment, and mingled the Private Souldiers thereof amongſt his Regiments to fill up the Companies: And then having given the Council of State an Accompt of what he had done, he proceeded in his March towards London with four Regiments of Foot, Viz. his Own, Colonel Reads, Colonel Lydcotts, and Colonel Hubblethornes; And Three Regiments of Horſe, his Own, Colonel Knights, and Colonel Clowberries, which made his Number in all 5800 beſides Officers; that is, Four Thouſand Foot, and Eighteen Hundred Horſe; He came the 19th of January to Nottingham, where Clarges came to him the day following, on which day alſo, Scot and Robinſon arrived at Leiceſter; and becauſe the next day was Sunday, they reſted there, and met the General upon the Road betwixt Leiceſter and Nottingham the 22th.

Clarges gives the General an Account how Affairs ſtood at London.

At Nottingham, Clarges, having had ſecret Conference with the General, communicated to him in what Condition all Affairs ſtood at London, and that they had there two thouſand Horſe, and eight thouſand Foot, moſt of them modelled to their own Principles; That the Horſe were the Regiments of Okey, Haſlerig, Rich, and Desborow; and though they had newly given the laſt to Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, yet all the Officers under him were of the ſame Mould as the Former. The Regiments of Foot were commanded by Ayres, Markeham, Srteater, Fitch, Moſs, Fleetwood, Morley, and Fagg; of all which, he could have no Aſſurance but of the two laſt: For Morley's men were firm to him, deſerted their Officers in the North, and declared for him; And Faggs was a new Regiment, raiſed about Portſmouth in his behalf. He told him, That except he could get all theſe Horſe and Foot out of London, (except Morley's and Fagg's Regiments) and diſperſe them into ſeveral Quarters, and march his own men thither, and be Maſter of London, he could never expect to do any good for his Country; ſince in all theſe times, it had been experienced, That to what ever was done at London, where they had Nine or Ten Thouſand Men to juſtifie their Actions, all the reſt of the Regiments ſubmitted.

And gives his Advice as touching the Regiments that were quartered in London.

And if his diſtinct and abſolute Command in Scotland had not hapned in a Conjuncture when Fleetwood and Lambert, the two chief Officers of the Army, were in a Jealouſie of each other, and their Treaſure quite exhauſted, he had never been able to have ſtood againſt them; and although there was that Jealouſie, and the Principles on which he declared were ſuch, as moſt of theſe in Command favoured: yet how ſlowly did Ireland and the Fleet joyn with him? And even the Council of State themſelves (who had the Temptation of Power to excite them) were backward enough to appear till they ſaw a Diſtraction in the others Counſels; for fear, as ſome of the Chief of them alledged, leſt the King's Party might have Opportunity to mingle with their Levies, if they ſhould make any: Theſe Conſiderations took ſuch impreſſion in the General, as made him apprehend great Difficulties in what he went about, till Clarges told him, there were yet probable Hopes to make him Maſter of his Wiſhes; which he propoſed thus: He told him, The Council of State conſiſted of ſuch only as had taken the Oath of Abjuration; And till he ſhould take that, they would be ſo diffident of him, that whatever he deſired of them, of any material Concernment, would be denied; That the Major Part in Parliament were againſt the Oath; And therefore in all his Affairs he was to apply himſelf to them, and therefore that his beſt way would be to write them a Letter to this purpoſe, That he thought it inconvenient for their Service, that ſo many of the Souldiery now in London, lately in Rebellion againſt them, ſhould be truſted with their Guards, till the preſent Officers by them placed upon them, ſhould have by Diſcipline reduced them to perfect Obedience. To which the General Anſwered, That he approved of the Advice, but if they ſhould offer to have an equal Number of his Regiments with the other, that Objection would be removed; and beſides, he believed he had not men enough to ſupply the Guards, which theſe now in London kept.

To this Clarges replied, It was worth his Attempt to endeavour this; and that the ſame Reaſon for not mingling the men, might hold as for not truſting them intire; but as concerning their Guards, that he had brought with him a Liſt of all their Quarters, and did believe his Three Regiments of Horſe, being in number, within two hundred, as many as the four now there, they might do the ſame Duty; And that his four Regiments of Foot, now full as they were, might well keep the ſame Guards as ſix of theirs.

The General, in fine, approving of all he ſaid, Clarges drew the Letter to the Parliament, for him to ſign, in theſe words:

Right Honourable,

The General's Letter to the Houſe.

I Have lately acquainted the Council of State with what Forces I have ſent into Scotland, and more are neceſſary to be ſent thither, to reinforce them, and ſecure the Peace of that Country, which I preſume they have been pleaſed to report to you; I am now marched in Obedience to your Commands thus far on my way towards London, with four Regiments of Foot, and two Regiments of Horſe;

each Regiment of Foot containing a thousand, and each Regiment of Horse Six hundred; so that by a List which I have sent to me from the Quarter-Master-General of the Horse and Foot in London, I have disposed of these Regiments which march with me; And I humbly offer, That all those now in London, except Colonel Fagg's Regiment, and Colonel Morley's, may be sent to the several Quarters by me assigned; for, with Submission, I conceive it not for your Service, that those Souldiers now in London, lately in Rebellion against you, should mingle with these your approved faithful Regiments, till the present Officers by you put upon them have by Discipline reduced them to a more assured Obedience to You. The Three Regiments of Horse with Me, are as many in Number as those now in London; and my Four Regiments of Foot near as full as the Six I remove, so that your Numbers are not lessened: In this Letter I send two Lists; in one of them the Quarters are set down for these Regiments which March with Me into London; and in the other, the several Quarters of those to March out, Which I did not appoint, but upon much Consideration of the present Posture of your Affairs, and intelligence of the Distemper'd Condition of the Places to which I assign them. I have sent a faithful Servant of yours, to receive your Commands in this Business; because on Your Forces under Me will be drawn to Barnet; And if on that Day those in London March out, We may supply their Places: But I humbly desire your Pleasure may be so early communicated to Us, that I may send the Quarter-Masters to make Provision for the Men; Which is all at present from, &c.

A List of all the Quarters that were assigned the Souldiery that marched out of London upon Monk's marching in.

The General approved of the Letter, and signed it; and they agreed, that it should not be sent till he came to St. Albans; That those in the House, of the Faction for the Oath of Abjuration, might suppose it came with the Privity of Scot and Robinson; and seeing him so near, be less apt to oppose his Desires: It was Midnight before thus much was Resolved; but in regard he was to March the next Morning, he resolved fully to settle the whole Affair before he went to bed; and therefore sent for the Books of Maps, for the better assigning the Quarters of those that were to March out: And by the Quarter-Master-General's List he disposed the Quarters of his own Men; Colonel Knight was one in whom he had great Confidence, and he was sent for to assist in this Assignation of Quarters, but strictly enjoyned to Secrecy.

The Regiments of Horse to march out were ordered thus: Okey's Regiment, To Bedford one Troop, Buckingham one Troop, Alisbury one Troop, Peterborough one Troop, and Northampton two Troops.

Haslerig's Regiment; To Reading one Troop, Oxford two Troops, Glouceſter one Troop, Worceſter one Troop, Hereford one Troop.

Ashley-Cooper's Regiment; To Basingstoke one Troop, Bath one Troop, Bristol two Troops, Salisbury two Troops.

Rich's Regiment; To Ipswich one Troop, Colchester one Troop, Norwich two Troops, Bury one Troop, Yarmouth one Troop.

The Foot were disposed as followeth:

Colonel Ayrs his Regiment; To Sandwich one Company, Dover two Companies, Canterbury five Companies, Rye two Companies.

Colonel Markeham's Regiment; To Ipswich three Companies, to Colchester five Companies, and to Sudbury two Companies.

Colonel Streater's Regiment; To Buckingham three Companies, to Northampton five Companies, and to Newark upon Trent two Companies. The Confidence the General had of Colonel Streater, in placing his Regiment in the midst of the Kingdom, afterwards proved a good Expedient at the breaking out of Lambert.

The Regiment belonging to Fleetwood; To Hereford two Companies, to Oxford four Companies, to Worceſter four Companies.

Col. Mos's Regiment; To Cambridge five Companies, and to Ely five Companies.

Col. Fitch's Regiment; To Chichester five Companies, and the rest to Winchester.

The Disposition of those to be in London were in this Order:

The General's own Regiment of Horse in the Mews, and in the Strand.

Col. Knight's Regiment; To have four Troops in Kings-street, and Tuttle-street in Westminster, and two Troops in Holburn.

Col. Clowberrie's Regiment; Two Troops in Southwark, one in Bishops-Gate-street, and three in Smithfield.

The General's Regiment of Foot in S. James's, and Parts adjacent.

Col. Read's Regiment in Somerset-house, the Strand, Long-Acre, Covent-Garden, and St. Martins Lane.

Col. Lydcott's Regiment in Thanet-house, Peter-house, and Parts adjacent.

Col. Hubblethorn's Regiment, in Holborn, Smithfield, and Parts adjacent.

Col. Fagg's Regiment in Southwark:

Col. Morley's Regiment in the Tower, and Parts adjacent.

The next Morning the General marched towards Leicester, and he met Scot and Robinson, the Parliaments Commissioners, in the way to it, and they never parted with him till he came to London.

The General's Answer concerning the Oath of Abjuration.

At Leicester the General expected to be attaqued about the Oath of Abjuration, and was much troubled to think how to divert it. Clarges told him, He had a plain and a fair Answer to make to them; which was, That he heard many men of undoubted Integrity had refused the Oath; and till he came to London, to hear the Reasons on both sides, for the taking and refusing, he could not with Prudence resolve it. This Advice he followed, and succeeded in it.

Scot and Robinson's Message to him from the House.

Scot and Robinson at their first Interview told him, That the Parliament had Ordered a Thousand Pounds a Year for ever to be settled on him, and appointed them to acquaint him with it; and to let him know the sense the Parliament had of his great Services, and that they were providing Monies for his Souldiers, and were glad to hear of his repairing to London.

The

Commissioners from the City, met the General at Harbrow.

The General was never more put to it than in this Journey to dissemble his Inclinations; For these men watched every moment of his time: At Harbrow Alderman Fowke, Alderman Vincent, and Mr. Bromfield, met him as Commissioners from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of London; and at the same time, Sir John Norris, with many of the chief Gentry of Northamptonshire, welcomed him into their County.

They propound the re-admission of the Secluded Members.

The Citizens, after a Congratulatory Speech, fell upon Particulars, for the general Settlement of the Kingdom; and Mr. Bromfield, in a handsome free Speech, after the enumeration of the several Calamities it lay under, as the best Remedy, proposed the re-admission of the Secluded Members, that the Parliament might be made full and free. Scot was so impatient at this, That he took the Words out of the Generals Mouth, and would not permit him to answer them. He told them, Now the Parliament had subjected the Military Power, to a due subordination to the Civil, they were free; and that having already given their Judgment in the Case of the Secluded Members, it did not become them to insist on their re-admission. Fowke Endeavoured to qualifie what Bromfield had propounded, by saying, He conceived they were not obliged by their Instructions, to desire the Generals Mediation further, than that they might have all their own Members admitted, since it was unreasonable, that they should be Governed by a Parliament, where they had not their Representatives.

Scot stifly opposeth them.

This Discourse, on all sides, was managed with some heat; and the General was forced to comply with Scot and Robinson, in their Extravagancies, to preserve their Opinion of him, which made the Citizens part from him somewhat unsatisfied, and so they continued, till he sent Clarges privately to give them a better understanding of his Intentions. But Sir John Norris, and the Northamptonshire Gentlemen, who were prepared to attend him at Northampton with an Address, were so much discouraged, that they thought to decline it, till Doctor Barrow requested Mr. Philip Howard, to advise them to proceed in their Intentions, and to assure them, That though they had not a satisfactory Answer, they might be sure it would produce a good Effect. At Northampton Sir John Norris delivered his Address; and as he marched to St. Albans, several of the same nature were presented to him from the Gentry of Buckingham-shire, Oxford-shire, Norfolk, and almost all Counties, which did all agree in the same Matter (viz.) For the Restitution of the Members Secluded in the Year, 1648. and the filling up the Vacancies in Parliament, or else for the calling of a full and Free Parliament. All which were answered with much respect by him, although he durst not discover his Approbation of their Desires: And it is very observable, That in all the Counties, so much Caution was observed, That no Gentlemen signed any of these Addresses, that had ever been engaged in his present Majesties, or his Royal Fathers Cause, nor scarce any of the Sons of such.

The General seems to comply with Scot and Robinson.

Sir John Norris, and the Gentlemen of Northamptonshire, make an Address to him.

Several other Addresses, pleading for a Free Parliament.

At Dunstable the General consulted Major Knight and Clarges, about the filling up the Blanks, in the Letter prepared at Nottingham, having had Thoughts to send it by Clarges, Knight, or Clark his Secretary: But upon further consideration, it was thought convenient not to part with Knight, because his presence would be requisite with his Troops, if any Disorders should happen upon their March to London; as for Clark, he was so necessary to be with the General, for the issuing out Orders, that he could not be spared: and for Clarges, it was judged more expedient, that he should be sent before, to prepare a Party in the House; so that Lydcott was chosen to be sent, as one very grateful to the Speaker, to whom he was near ally'd, and Friday was the Day inserted for his March into London: And upon the next Days Consultation, which was Saturday in the Evening, the 28 of January, he was dispatched away: And on Monday the Letter was delivered, which caused a long and violent Debate: Hasterig told them, the Council of State had before agreed, that four Regiments of those in London should march out, and four of the Generals be admitted; but nothing prevailed that he said against the Generals Letter: So that after a Debate, from eight in the Morning, to twelve at Noon, the Result was in these words.

Lydcott made choice of, for the carrying of the General's Letter to the House, about the sending of their Souldiers out of the City.

Monday, January 30. 1659.

Upon Reading of a Letter from S. Albans, from General Monk, Dated the 28 of January, 1659. and two Lists therein.

Resolved upon the Question by the Parliament, That the Parliament doth agree with the Distributions of the Souldiers, according to these Lists.

The House consent to the General's Desire.

Resolved upon the Question by the Parliament, That it be referred to the Commissioners of the Army, to see the Souldiers forthwith distributed accordingly.

Lydcott returns to the General with the welcome News of these Votes, as well might it be so to him; for from the moment of the execution of them (which gave him the possession of London) he could not but think his Conduct would prove very ill, if he did not reduce the Armies, in the three Kingdoms, to his Obedience.

The General hath constant Intelligence of all Affairs in Ireland by means of Capt. Cuff.

Captain Cuff, an Agent from Sir Charles Coot in Ireland, had attended the General, in all his March from Newcastle to London, and given him, from time to time, an account of all Occurrences; by which means the General kept a strict Correspondence both with him, the Lord Broghil, and several others of the chief Officers there; Who, although they had reduced all that Kingdom to the Obedience of the Parliament, were nevertheless suspected by them; and Scot insinuated to the General, That notwithstanding all their Pretenses he had good grounds to believe, they had some other Interest in their Aim, than that of the present Parliament.

The General diverted this Jealousie, with assurances of their Fidelity, and that he would undertake for them; which allay'd the Suſpicion for that time, or at leaſt ſo raked it up in Aſhes, that no Sparks outwardly appeared.

A Mutiny among ſome of the Souldiery, that were to depart out of the City.

The Regiments that were to march from London, to give place to the General and his Regiments, had a Months Pay aſſigned them, to be paid at their Remove; but that did not hinder them from Mutiny at their departure, eſpecially thoſe that Quartered at St. James's and Somerſet-houſe, which was not without great Induſtry of the Officers appeaſed: Upon which followed about Midnight an Inſurrection in the City, where about ſix or ſeven hundred drew together, and by Beat of Drum about the Streets, invited others to joyn with them for a Free Parliament, and the Liberty of the City, in expectation to have the Souldiers joyn with them; but two Troops of Horſe ſuddenly diſperſed moſt of them, and took the reſt (about Eight and Thirty) Priſoners, which were the next Morning committed to Lambeth houſe: This Inſurrection, together with the Diſorders of the Souldiers, ſo frighted the Council of State, that in the beginning of the fore-going Night, they had ſent to the General to march with all haſte into London; but that was afterwards contradicted, and he drew not near the Town till the Morning, and in the Afternoon, the others being all marched out, Tumults quieted, and all both within and without in a great Calm,

A Rising in the City, diſperſed by the Souldiers.

Gen. Monk marcheth with his Forces into the City of London.

He marched with his Army by Grays-Inn-Lane into Holborn, and from thence down Chancery-Lane, and ſo through Temple-Bar, along the Strand, to White-Hall. The Three Regiments of Horſe marched firſt, and He in the Head of them gallantly mounted, with his Trumpets richly Habited before him, and ſeveral Led-Horſes after him, with many of his Chief Officers, and ſeveral Perſons of Honour and Quality; and after them marched the Foot: The Speaker of the Houſe met him in the Street near Somerſet-houſe, where they Complemented each other: After which the General marched on to White-Hall, and the Speaker went to the Rolls: As ſoon as the Souldiers were Quartered, and all the Guards ſet, the General was viſited by ſeveral of the Council of State; and being invited to take his place there, he went in Compliance with them: But when the Oath of Abjuration was tendered, he refuſed it, for the Reaſons before-mentioned, and was therefore not admitted, whereupon he returned to his Appartment. The next Day was ſpent in Viſits to him, from all the Members of Parliament, and many other Perſons of the higheſt Quality: Mr. Scot told him, The Parliament did intend on Monday, publickly in their Houſe, to give him their Acknowledgments of his Service, and that they expected he ſhould there make publick Profeſſions of his Affections to their Intereſt and Authority, and his Diſlike of the Addreſſes to him, for the Secluded Members, and a Free Parliament.

He refuſeth the Oath of Abjuration.

Scot inſtructs him how to receive the intended Gratulations of the Houſe.

He made little Anſwer to him, but that he was much obliged to them, for the Honour of ſo great a Reſpect, and ſhould endeavour by his future Services, to give Evidences of his juſt Reſentments of it.

It is obſervable, That from this time, in all the Orders to him from the Parliament, they called him only Commiſſioner Monk, and not General: And although yet no publick Order had ſuperſeded the Commiſſion of Commander in Chief, ſent to him by the Council of State, they allowed him no Authority, but conjunct with others, whereof he took little notice, but proceeded as before in the ſole Exerciſe of the Command of the Army. He was ſomewhat perplexed, how to behave himſelf in the Parliament, in reference to the great Profeſſions and Proteſtations they expected from him, of his Averſions from the King and his Party, to balance his refuſing the Oath of Abjuration: But he reſolved to act in that occaſion, as moderate as the Seaſon would bear, and yet to temper his Speech ſo, as not altogether to fail their Expectations.

The Stile given him in their Orders, not General, but only Commiſſioner Monk.

On Monday, which was the Sixth of February, he was brought to the Court of Wards by Scot, Robinſon, and ſome other Members; after which, Scot acquainted the Houſe with his being there: Whereupon the Serjeant with his Mace being ſent to attend him, carried it before him, Scot and Robinſon conducting him into the Houſe, to a Place on the left Hand within the Bar, where a Chair faced with Velvet was ſet for him to ſit on.

He is conducted with much Ceremony into the Houſe.

As ſoon as he had made Obeyſance, the Speaker bid him ſit down; but he deſiring to be excuſed, and ſtanding behind the Chair, the Speaker expreſſed himſelf to him in theſe words:

The Speakers Speech to him.

IT hath been a common Obſervation, that the lighter Paſſions have a loud Voice, but ſuch as are of greater Magnitude are always ſilent: As it is in Paſſions, ſo in Actions alſo; Thoſe of a leſſer Dimenſion, are often magnified above their Meaſure, but Hiſtorians do commonly fail in the Expreſſions of Noble and Great Actions, and ſuch are frequently leſſened; and ſo it may well be in thoſe of this Days Remembrance: The Infallible Author tells Us, That in Judea is GOD known, and his Name is great in Iſrael; That Knowledge and Greatneſs of GOD is verified in the Inſtance of Martial Affairs, That the ſtout-hearted are ſpoiled, they have ſlept their ſleep, and none of the Men of Might have found their Hands. This is verified this Day amongſt Us here preſent, that both We and You might acknowledge, that it is GOD, not Man, that hath performed this Great Work; that We his Creatures here may neither aſcribe it to our Wiſdom, or Your Valour, but that it was GOD alone, and none elſe. But yet I have always obſerved, that albeit the Glory appertains to the LORD, yet the Influence of that

Glory

Glory extends it ſelf to the Inſtruments in his hand; and thereby thoſe Beams enlighten your Honour and Valour, as an eſpecial Inſtrument; not as a Merit, but as a Reward upon Your Prudence and wiſe Conduct. The Knowledge of what hath been done in this our Reſtitution, is not unknown in theſe Nations; I believe, to this Part of the World, how our Friends (as we conceived) left Us, and what Defection hath been in Duty and Truſt. The Face of this Land was covered with a Gloomy and Black Cloud, and the whole Nation left, in the Judgment of Man, to the uttermoſt of Ruine: But, in that Condition, We did as the Prophet, in the greateſt Miſery of Iſrael, eſpy a little Cloud, no broader than a Hand, which is infinitely, in an inſtant, become the Refreſhment of the whole Nation: That little Cloud was diſcerned afar off in your Hand, and by the Prudence of Your wiſe Conduct, it diſperſed the Miſeries of theſe Nations, and became a Glorious Mercy to them all. This Houſe hath a true Reſentment of Your Prudence and Conduct in this Great Work, and have commanded Me to return their hearty Thanks: But I muſt not end here, for they have alſo a full Senſe of thoſe Noble Commanders, Officers, and Souldiers, both of their Fidelity, Valour, and Duty, in this Expedition: And as I have returned to You their Thanks, ſo it is their Deſire, that you ſhould return the ſame to Your Commanders, Officers, and Souldiers, who have been Inſtrumental in theſe Actions.

After he had ended, the General ſtood up and ſpake as followeth:

Mr. Speaker,

The General's Speech in Anſwer to the Speakers.

" AMongſt the many Mercies of God " to theſe poor Nations, your peace- " able Reſtitution is not the leaſt; It is " (as you ſaid) his Work alone, and " to Him belongs the Glory of it; and " I eſteem it as a great effect of his " Goodneſs to me, that he was pleaſed " to make me, amongſt many worthier " in your Service, ſome way Inſtrumen- " tal in it. I did nothing but my Duty, " and deſerve not to receive ſo great an " Honour and Reſpect as you are plea- " ſed to give me at this time and " Place, which I ſhall ever acknow- " ledge as a high mark of your Favour to " me.

" SIR, I ſhall not now trouble you " with large Narratives, only give me " leave to acquaint you, That as I mar- " ched from Scotland hither, I obſerved " the People in moſt Counties in great " and earneſt expectations of a Settle- " ment, and ſeveral Applications were " made to me with numerous Subſcripti- " ons to them; The chiefeſt Heads of " their Deſires were for a Free and a full " Parliament, and that you would deter- " mine your Sitting; a Goſpel Miniſtry, " Encouragement of Learning and Uni- " verſities, and for admittance of the " Members Secluded before the year " 1648. without any prævious Oath or " Engagement. To which I commonly " Anſwered, That you are now in a " Free-Parliament, and if there be any " Force remaining upon you, I would " endeavour to remove it; and that you " had Voted to fill up your Houſe, and " then you would be a full Parliament " alſo; And that you had already deter- " mined your Sitting: And for the Mi- " niſtry their maintenance, the Laws and " Univerſities, you had largely declared " concerning them in your laſt Declara- " tion; and I was confident you would " adhere to it: But as for thoſe Gentle- " men Secluded in the year 1648. I told " them, you had given Judgment in it, " and all People ought to acquieſce in that " Judgment; but to admit any Members " to ſit in Parliament without a prævious " Oath or Engagement, to preſerve the " Government in being, it was never done " in England.

" But although I ſaid it not to them, " I muſt ſay, with pardon to you, That " the leſs Oaths and Engagements are im- " poſed, (with reſpect had to the Secu- " rity of the Common Cauſe) your " Settlement will be the ſooner attained " to. I am the more particular in theſe " matters, to let you ſee how grateful " your preſent Conſultations about theſe " things will be to the People. I know " all the ſober Gentry will cloſe with " you, if they may be tenderly and gent- " ly uſed; and I am ſure you will ſo uſe " them, as knowing it to be the Com- " mon Concern to amplifie, and not to " leſſen our Intereſt, and to be careful " that neither the Cavaleer, nor Phana- " tick Party have yet a Share in your " Civil or Military Power; of the laſt " of whoſe Impatience to Government, " you have lately had ſo ſevere experi- " ence. I ſhould ſay ſomething of Ire- " land and Scotland, Indeed Ireland is in an

" an unſettled Condition, and made worſe " by your Interruptions, which prevent- " ed the paſſing an ACT for the Settle- " ment of the Eſtates of Adventurers " and Souldiers there, which I heard you " intended to have done in a few days; " and I preſume it will be now quickly " done, being ſo neceſſary at this time, " when the Wants of the Common- " wealth call for Supplies; and People " will unwillingly pay Taxes for thoſe " Eſtates of which they have no legal " Aſſurance: I need not tell you how " much you were abuſed in the nomina- " tion of your Officers of your Armies " there; their malice that deceived you, " hath been ſufficiently manifeſted; I do " affirm, That thoſe now that have de- " clared for you, will continue faithful, " and thereby Evince, that as well there " as here, it is the ſober Intereſt muſt eſta- " bliſh your Dominion. As for Scotland, I " muſt ſay, The People of that Nation " deſerve to be Cheriſhed; and I be- " lieve your late Declaration will much " glad their Spirits; for nothing was to " them more dreadful, than a fear to be " over-run with Phanatick Notions: I " humbly recommend them to your Af- " fection and Eſteem, and deſire the in- " tended Union may be proſecuted, and " their Taxes made proportionable to " thoſe in England, for which I am En- " gaged by promiſe to become a Suiter to " you: And truly, Sir, I muſt ask leave " to intreat you to make a ſpeedy Provi- " ſion for the Civil Government there, " of which they have been deſtitute near " a Year, to the ruine of many Fami- " lies: And except Commiſſioners for " managing of the Government, and " Judges to ſit in Courts of Judicature, be " ſpeedily appointed, that Country will " be very miſerable.

" I directed Mr. Gumble lately to pre- " ſent ſome Names to you both for Com- " miſſioners and Judges; but by reaſon " of your great Affairs, he was not re- " quired to deliver them in Writing, but " I humbly preſent them to your Conſi- " deration.

And ſo concluding, he delivered them the Paper wherein the ſaid Names were contained.

His Speech excepted againſt by Scot and thoſe of his Party.

Scot and ſome others were much offended that he aſſumed ſo much in this Speech, and were once thinking to interrupt him. They complained to their Confidents, That he was too poſitive in undertaking for the Officers in Ireland, of whoſe Affections to the Parliament in the preſent Conſtitution of it, there was juſt cauſe of doubt; and that in the whole Speech he ſeem'd to affect Popularity, and gave the Cavaliers a poſſibility of being received into the exerciſe of Truſt, with a total Excluſion of the more ſtrict Parliament-Party, under the Notion of Phanaticks.

The City continue malecontent.

But that which at this time more diſquieted theſe men than the General's Speech, was the diſcontented Carriage of the City; for the Common-Council had been in very high Debates about the Government, and were reſolved to pay no Publick Taxes till the Houſe were filled up with equal Repreſentatives: This they looked upon as drawing towards a Contempt of their Authority, and thought they could not better provide for their own Securities, than by oppoſing in time, and puniſhing ſuch Contumacies; they therefore on the eighth of February in the Evening at the Council of State Order the General to go into London the next Morning with a good part of the Army, and to ſeize upon Eleven of the moſt Active of the Common Council, and commit them to the Tower, as alſo to pull down the Poſts and Chains, and take down the Gates and Percullices of the City, and Quarter his Souldiers there, till they were reduced to Obedience.

The General ordered to march into the City and pull down the Gates.

The General was ſurprized at this Command, and debated many things with them in mitigation or ſuſpenſion of it, till near one in the Morning the next day, but nothing could divert their Reſolution; ſo that he was forced to obey their Orders, or quit his Command, for he had no longer time to deliberate than that very Morning in which they were to be put in Execution; inſomuch, that after three or four hours repoſe to refreſh himſelf, he marched into the City, and pulled down the Poſts and Chains, and took into Cuſtody Nine of the Citizens which he had Orders to ſecure, the other two abſented themſelves: The Nine Impriſoned, were Mr. Lawrence Bromfield of Tower-Street, Alderman Vincent, Alderman Bludworth, Mr. Thomas Brown of Woodſtreet, Mr. Daniel Spencer in Fridayſtreet, Mr. Penning in Fan-Church-ſtreet, Mr. Jackſon, Mr. Chamberlain, and Mr. Richard Ford. The City was much Alarm'd at this proceeding: And the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and ſeveral of the chiefeſt of the Citizens applied themſelves to him to moderate his Actions. All the City indeed ſeem'd as People confounded with wonder and Anxiety. And Colonel Hubblethorn, and others, the General's own Officers, were many of them ſo much troubled, That they came to him to offer up their Commiſſions, rather than be imployed in ſuch an Action: They told him, The honour and reſpect they had to his Perſon engaged them never to ſerve againſt him, or diſpute his Orders: But in this, ſince they could not without horrour obey them, they with tears pray'd him to diſpoſe of their Commands to ſome more neceſſary perſons. He was moved much at theſe their paſſionate expreſſions, but privately informed them of his own diſlike of what was Commanded; and therefore Conjured them to continue their Confidence in him, and execute what he had given them in Charge, as that from which better effects would enſue than was convenient at that time to be explained. With this they went away ſomewhat better contented, though not fully ſatisfied. He took his Quarter at the Three Tuns in Guild-Hall-Yard, where, notwithſtanding this Accident, he received with much Civility thoſe which came to him: Among whom, one Mr. Jolly, a diſcreet Citizen, with modeſty and temper repreſented to him the Inconveniencies of what he had undertaken, and told him, The Affections of the City to him were ſuch, that whatever he reaſonably could deſire of them, ſhould be eaſier obtained by Perſwaſion than Force. That the Controverſie between Enemies had nothing in it extraordinary; but to be ill Treated by Friends was very grievous. When Hewſon marched into the City with a greater Number, he could not Compaſs his Ends, but received Oppoſition with Contumelies and Affronts both to his Perſon and Party: But when he came, a general Calm and Kindneſs was ſeen in the Countenances of the People, And now that he had put his moſt rigorous Orders in Execution, they ſeemed rather amazed with Aſtoniſhment to receive it from his hand, than provoked to reſent the Indignity of it.

Mr. Jolly's Prudent Speech to the General.

This Prudent Speech made great impreſſion on him, inſomuch that he told them thereupon, That he had Orders to take down the Gates and Percullices as well as the Poſts and Chains, but he would immediately write to the Parliament to mitigate their Commands. And accordingly he writ to acquaint them, That he had ſecured all the Perſons given him in charge to Impriſon, except Two that were abſent; And that the next Morning the Lord Mayor and Aldermen had appointed a meeting of the Common-Council, where they doubted not that all things would be compoſed to their Satisfaction, and the Aſſeſſments be paid, (which was the chiefeſt cauſe of his March into London) ſo that thereupon he had forborn to meddle with the Gates and Percullices, till he ſhould receive further Orders, becauſe ſuch ſevere acting would highly inceuſe the City, and he hoped by mild means to reduce them to reaſon. This Letter made them higher than before; for whereas in their former Orders they had appointed him only to unhinge the Gates, and pull down the Percullices; They now Command him to deſtroy both Gates and Percullices: And to prevent the meeting of the Common-Council, they ordered, That the preſent Common-Council of the City ſhould be diſſolved; and declared them null and void. And without any other Anſwer, they ſent theſe Votes to the General.

The General Writes to the Houſe, to mitigate their Commands.

They, ſo much the more ſtirred up, ſend more rigorous Orders than before.

Upon this return, he was not a little perplexed in Mind, and very thoughtful what to do; but at laſt he reſolved fully to execute his Orders, that the Houſe might not take occaſion from his diſpute of them, in the unſettled Condition of the Souldiers, to vacate his Commiſſion, and thereupon Commanded his Souldiers to Break all the Gates and Percullices in pieces. Which done, on Fryday in the Evening he came back to White-Hall; but at his return, Scot and Haſlerig, and ſome others of their Violent Friends were very much moved, as if he had diſobeyed his Orders, by which they ſaid he was to continue with his Army in the City, till ſeveral Deſigns of theirs for the further humbling them to their purpoſes ſhould be effected; and there was a Whiſper as if he were to have been Queſtioned for it. It was alſo artificially contrived, that the ſame day the Gates were pulled down, a Petition from a Factious Phanatick Party of Citizens was preſented by one Praiſe-God Barebone to the Houſes to Countenance the Action, and to preſs an Oath of Renunciation to be taken by all that ſhould be imployed in Civil and Military Affairs: Nevertheleſs, to pleaſe the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, They had the Thanks of the Houſe for their Moderation in this time of diſorder in the City.

The General Commands the Gates and Percullices to be broken down.

A Petition to the Houſe from the Sectarian Party of the City.

That Evening Clarges privately went to the General, and repreſented to him the ill Conſequences of his Proceedings in London; And that the Influence that City had by Commerce, and other occaſions, all over England, would quickly diffuſe the Infamy of the Fact: And all the Cities and Towns would be Alarm'd, believing if that Great City ſhould be made a Village, all their Franchiſes and Priviledges would be quickly Subverted. So that he had no way to redeem his Reputation, but the very next Morning to return into the City with his Army, and declare for a Free Parliament. The General, though he demurred a little, upon this Counſel, yet he ſeemed very ſenſible of the Contempts they at Weſtminſter had put upon him in the whole Progreſs of this Affair, and was reſolved after a day or two's private Conſultation with ſome of his Officers, to do ſomething to regain the Eſteem he had loſt; for the performance of which, he ſaid, He would take time but till Tueſday Morning. This was the effect of their firſt Diſcourſe. But a while after, Dr. Barrow came to Clarges, earneſtly urging him to renew his Advice to the General, ſetting forth, That delay might give his Enemies time to put out of his power the doing what he intended; And that it was moſt neceſſary to be ſpeedy in the retriving the good Opinion of the City, to manifeſt thereby the greater diſlike of what he had done the day before, as that to which the neceſſity of the time (againſt his own Inclination) preſſed him to. Whilſt they were in this Diſcourſe, Two Officers of the Army, in whom the General then had much Truſt, came in to them, and they altogether went to him again, and, with the ſame Arguments reiterated, diſſwaded from delay; Adding, That they had certain Intelligence, that the Council of State began to be Jealous of him, for that little Favour he ſhewed to the City in the execution of his Orders, and that he ought therefore in Prudence to provide for his own Safety. Barrow was appointed to gain what Intelligence he could againſt the next Morning; And the General with Clarges, Thompſon, Sanders, and Barton, Which two laſt were adviſed with as two Officers that very much inclined to Admiſſion of the Secluded Members, Conſulted what to offer to the Houſe as a ground for their March into London: At laſt, waving all thought of making any excuſe for marching into the City, They conclude, That Orders ſhould be privately Iſſued for about a dozen of the Chief Officers, in whom he had greateſt Confidence, to meet at Six the next Morning at the General's Quarters, and for Clarges Counſels the General to endeavour the ſpeedy recovery of the Cities good Opinion.

Dr. Barrow urges the danger of delay in this buſineſs.

The General upon advice with ſome of his Officers, concludes to return immediately for the drawing of ſome men together before White-Hall, to be ready to March; And that a Letter ſhould be ſent to the Houſe in the Morning ſigned by the General and a Seleſt number of Military Officers, to complain of many Irregularities committed by them: Amongſt others,

The Subſtance of his Letter to the Houſe.

That they gave too much Countenance to Lambert, Vane, and ſeveral that Engaged with the late Committee of Safety; And that they had permitted Ludlow, and ſome others, to Sit in their Houſe, that had been by Sir Charles Coot, and ſoom of the Iriſh Officers, accuſed of High-Treaſon; And had Countenanced too much a late Petition, to exclude the moſt Sober and Conſcientious both Miniſters and others by Oaths, from all Imployment and Maintenance: And in Concluſion, to Requeſt, That by Friday next they ſhould Iſſue out Writs to fill up their Houſe, and when filled, ſhould riſe at their appointed time, to give place to a Full and a Free Parliament.

The General, having agreed to theſe Heads, retired to his repoſe, whileſt the reſt penn'd the Letter, which he directed to be drawn in his Name, and in the name of the reſt of the Officers of the Army. The next day the Officers, who had been ſent for to meet at White-Hall, repairing thither early in the Morning, the Letter was produced and read to them, (the General being preſent) and by all of them approved of; whereupon the General Signed it, and with him ſeveral Colonels (viz.) Saunders, Read, Lydcott, Knight, Cloberry, Redman, and Hubblethorn, one Lieutenant Colonel, which was Ethelbert Morgan, who Commanded the General's own Regiment of Foot, and Six Majors, Johnſon, Barton, Smith, Banniſter, Pryme, and Nicholls; Cloberry and Lydcott were ſent with the Letter to the Houſe, and Clarges at the ſame time was ſent to my Lord Mayor, to acquaint him with the General's Intentions to come and Quarter his Army that Night in the City; and to diſpoſe him and the City to give him a favourable reception.

The Letter being ſigned by the General and ſeveral Officers, is ſent by Cloberry and Lydcott.

The General having ſent Clarges before to the Lord Mayor marches to Finsbury.

Theſe things thus ordered, the General immediately marched away to Finsbury, where he drew up his Souldiers, till he ſhould hear from Clarges how the City would receive him: Who finding my Lord Mayor very reſerved, and averſe to the General's coming, as terrified with his Actions the day before, had applyed himſelf to Alderman Robinſon, and ſome others that he durſt truſt, and acquainted them privately, that the General's coming was for good to the City and Kingdom; but did not inſtance in the Particulars of what was in agitation, having had Orders to conceal that, till it was known how they at Weſtminſter ſhould receive the Letter; Nevertheleſs, Robinſon ſends for two or three Aldermen of his Confidents, and with theſe they go to the Lord Mayor to mollifie him, but without any effect for the preſent: Nevertheleſs, Clarges told him, the General was reſolved, though he Quartered not in the City, at leaſt to be his Gueſt at Dinner: And accordingly he ſent to the General, to deſire him to march with all his men to Leaden-Hall-ſtreet, to the Lord Mayor's Door, which he immediately did. While Matters were thus carried on in the City, the Houſe was in great Diſorder at the reading of the General's Letter; but they temporized ſo far, as to ſhew no publick Diſtaſte at it, but Ordered,

Clarges finding my Lord Mayor diſtruſtful, applies himſelf to Alderman Robinſon.

The Houſe diſſemble their reſentment of the General's Letter, and give him good words.

That the Thanks of the Houſe ſhould be given to the General for his Faithful Service in ſecuring of the City; and that, as to filling up the Houſe, the Parliament were upon Qualifications before the Receipt of his Letter, and the ſame ſhould be diſpatched in due time; and that Mr. Scot, and Mr. Robinſon ſhould attend him with their Votes, in Anſwer to his Letter.

The General troubled at the Lord Mayor's Diffidence of him.

As ſoon as the General came to the Lord Mayor, he told him, He was very welcome to his houſe, but that the City was full of Fears and ſad Apprehenſions of his ſudden Return, after ſuch violent Actions as the Day before his Souldiers had been employed in. The General told him, He hoped to make them of another mind in few hours. Yet was he inwardly ſomewhat troubled, not knowing what hindrance this Coldneſs he found might give to his Deſigns; inſomuch, that he called Clarges aſide, and check'd him, as one who had over-haſtily preſſed him on, upon ſo little time of Conſideration, to ſo great an Enterprize. To which, he anſwered, That he was now too far advanced to go back; and that the beſt Advice he could give him, was, to deſire the Lord Mayor preſently to appoint the Aldermen and Common Council to meet him at four a Clock at Guild-Hall, and there to acquaint them with his real Intentions, to comply with the Deſires of the whole Kingdom.

Requeſts the calling of a Common-Council.

This Motion pleaſing, and the ſaid Requeſt being accordingly made to the Lord Mayor, Orders were immediately ſent out: but in the mean time, Scot and Robinſon came to him from them at Weſtminſter, with the before-mentioned Anſwer to the Letter.

Scot and Robinſon ſent from the Houſe to the General, with their Anſwer to his Letter.

Scot made Proteſtations of the Parliaments Affection to him, and their high Opinion of his Services, thereby to divert him from his Intentions of ſtaying in the City: But Colonel Bridges, an Officer of Ireland, that ſtood by, told them, The General had no reaſon to credit their fair Speeches, ſince their Words and their Practices agreed not together, as was manifeſt in their Contempt of thoſe his Friends in Ireland, who for his ſake hazarded themſelves in their Service; And now when he came from the Iriſh Army to impeach Ludlow and Jones of High-Treaſon, he could have no Juſtice, but was put off from Day to Day, when Praiſe-God Barebone could be heard and admitted with a Seditious Petition the firſt moment he came to the Door of the Houſe. And Cloberry told them, The General and all his Officers could not but perceive that they grew Jealous of them, and that they went about to Balance them with ſuch as had been their Enemies, which made it high-time for them to conſult for their own ſafeties.

Bridges and Cloberry ſharply upbraids them.

The General cloſed all with Moderation, telling them, All would be well, if they ſtrictly obſerved the Advice of the Letter, and iſſued out Writs on Friday next for filling up their Houſe.

With

An Act for constituting five Commissioners for the Government of the Army.

With this Answer they returned to their Fellow-Members, not very well satisfied, as was evident by what they did that very Afternoon in the House; for they passed an Act to divide the Government of the Army among Five Commissioners; namely, General Monk, Sir Arthur Haslerig, the Colonels, Morley, Walton, and Alured, and made the Quorum of them to be Three.

This was opposed by many of the General's Friends, but they were not enough to hinder its Progress: at last, for an Expedient, it was moved, That General Monk should always be one of the Three for Quorum: But upon putting the Question, 'twas carried in the Negative. When word was brought him of this their Ingratitude to him, he could not avoid expressing much Indignation at it.

The Lord Mayor and Common-Council, being met at Guild-Hall about Five of the Clock, the General told them.

The General excuseth his late Proceeding in the City, before the Common-Council.

That the Imployment whereon he was sent, at his last being in the City, was the most ingrateful to him that ever he undertook, and so much against his Inclination, that if any thing less than quitting his Command, could have prevented it, he had never accepted such Imployment; nor did he value his Commission, out of any respect to himself, for he had often desired to lay it down; but as knowing how much it imported both him and them, to keep it out of the Hands of such as most probably would not be so well inclined as He, to the Settlement of these Nations; That what he had now to tell them, was, That he had that Morning sent to the Parliament, to issue out Writs within seven days, for the filling up of their House; and when filled, to sit no longer than till the Sixth of May, to give then Place to a full and a Free Parliament.

The City joyfully receives the News of a Free Parliament.

The News of this was quickly dispers'd through all the City, and received with great Demonstrations of Joy, expressed in Bone-fires, and Ringing of Bells.

After this, he retired for some time to a house in Cheapside, to give order for the Quartering of his Souldiers, and went himself to Lodge at the Glass-house in Broad-street, till Drapers Hall could be accommodated for his Reception.

The Monday after his stay in the City, the Council of State writ to him, To desire his Presence with them, to assist with his Counsels, in the carrying on the great Affairs of the Nation.

To which he the next Day returned Answer,

The General's Answer to the Council of State, inviting him to come and sit with them.

That till the Oath should be taken away, which put a bar to him, and many others, from acting as Counsellors, his Presence could not be useful to them there: And withal, he informed them, That the Distractions of the City were increased by the continuance of Arms in the Hands of Phanaticks, and Persons Disaffected to the Parliament, who had 7000 lately out of the Stores delivered to them, and were providing more: Wherefore he desired them immediately to recall these Arms; and withal, to excuse his stay in the City for some longer time, till the minds of the Citizens were composed.

The City, and chief Officers of his Army, dissuade him from hearkning to the Parliaments Invitations, to return back to White-hall.

The Mayor and Aldermen of the City, and the Chief of the Officers (hearing how earnest the Parliament was to draw him again to White-Hall) importuned his Continuance in the City; and to induce him to it, they assure him, it cannot be safe for him, or them, that he remove; for that they had certain Information, That many private Letters were sent from Haslerig, and others, to withdraw the Affections of the Souldiery from him, and that certain men were imployed to several Regiments to debauch them: This Information had been enough to induce the General, had he not been resolved before: So that when Colonel Alured came from the Council of State, to perswade him against staying in the City; he acquainted him with what he heard. Alured laboured to infuse a Belief in him, of his having been mis-informed in those things. It was answered by the General, That he put no greater stress on those Reports, than to be vigilant over the Actions and Motions of the several Parties, deferring the belief of them, till time should evince the truth. But he assured him, He was advertized from Persons of good Fame, That notwithstanding that Lambert was proscribed, and Vane put out of this Parliament, and ordered to leave the Town; yet the stay of the latter was connived at, and Sir Arthur Haslerig, and several others, corresponded with them both.

Col. Alured solicites his return in vain.

Sir Arthur Haslerig writ many Expostulatory Letters, to free himself of these Imputations, but could not sufficiently clear himself of them. And now by more frequent Addresses than ever, the General is from all Counties solicited to the admission of the Secluded Members, which he only delayed, because the Army was not yet in a Temper for it; but to prepare them, he received Visits from some of the Secluded Members, where they were always admitted, to hear by their Discourses, how well they were inclined to the Settlement of the Peace of the Nations. In this Method he so far proceeded, as on the 18th of February, to have a Conference before him, of some of the Secluded Members, and some of the others. Those of the Sitting Members, were, St. John, Haslerig, Morley, Thompson, Ashley-Cooper, Weaver, White, Feilder, Hutchinson, and Rawleigh; Scot and Reynolds also were intended by the General to be there, but for want of timely Notice they came not. The Secluded Members that met them, were, Sir William Lewis, Sir John Evelyn, Sir John Holland, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Colonel Popham, Mr. Annesly, Mr. Knightly, Mr. Crew, Mr. Trevor, Colonel Harley, Colonel Norton, Sir John Temple, and Colonel Birch. They discoursed of many things, in order to a mutual Accord, for the Peace and Welfare of the Nations, but came to no Conclusion; because the sitting Members durst not undertake for the rest of the House, without their Consent, which could not be known but by Vote: Yet severally all of them who were then present seem'd well satisfied with that Moderation and Temper, which they found in those Gentlemen with whom they conferred.

The General is importuned from all Parts to admit the Secluded Members.

He admits of a Conference before him, of the Sitting Members, with some of the Secluded.

The General was fully bent to promote their Admission so far, that if it could not be done by Common Conſent, he Reſolved to admit them without it.

The Officers of the Army were conſulted with, and they were willing enough to have them ſit, on condition they would promiſe to Declare for a Common-Wealth Government, and paſs an Act for the Confirmation of the Poſſeſſion of their Lands, diſpoſed of ſince their Seclusion, and to agree upon a ſhort time for their Diſſolution. Wherefore, to try how far they were inclined, to admit of thoſe Conditions, Mr. Clarges, Colonel Cloberry, and Doctor Gumble, were appointed to Treat with ſome of them, who, when they met, had many Diſcourſes of the whole Matter;

The Officers of the Army conſent to the admiſſion of the Secluded, upon certain Conditions.

Mr. Clarges, and others, appointed to Treat with ſome of the Secluded concerning the ſaid Conditions.

The Secluded Members Declared, as to Government, they intended no alteration in it, or to Act further than in preparation for a Parliament to ſucceed them; and ſince there was no other way for their Summons, but by Writs, in the Name of the Keepers of the Liberty of England, by Authority of Parliament, they ſaw not how there could be by that Conſtitution any other Government introduced: As to Confirmation of Sales, and Diſpoſitions of Lands, they ſaid, they had been all made ſince the Seclusion, and they would not alter them, but rather mediate with the next Parliament, to paſs an Act for their Confirmation, and for the time of their Sitting, They were contented it ſhould determine in a Months time. Cloberry urged the great Inſecurity the Army and many of their Friends would be in, if their Publick Lands were not confirmed, which was the Price of their Blood; and though their not diſturbing ſuch Poſſeſſions in England, might be a little Satisfaction, yet the whole Nation of Ireland was unſettled, both as to Adventurers and Souldiers. To this it was Replied, That they ſhould not think themſelves in a Capacity to paſs any Acts at all, as being but one Houſe; and to prevent all Jealouſie of their Actions, they would conſent to be Limited to the Chief Heads of what they ſhould Conſult, during the ſhort time of their Continuance.

The Conſultations upon what the Members had delivered of their Intentions.

When the Conference ended, Report was made of the Subſtance of it to the General, and the reſt of the Chief Officers, who approved of every thing propoſed by the Secluded Members, except the not Confirmation of Publick Diſpoſitions of Lands, and their refuſing to paſs any Acts of Parliament: As to that of Lands, which they would not be drawn to confirm, Clarges told the Officers, they could not anſwer it to the Kingdom, to break with them for that Conſideration, thereby to obſtruct the Settlement of it, out of reſpect to their own private Intereſts; he ſaid the greateſt part of his own Eſtate was in Ireland, and that it was acknowledged by all, the greateſt Inſecurity of Publick Eſtates was in that Kingdom: yet he would for his own part ſubmit all his Concerns to the Determination of the next Parliament; rather than by oppoſing the Admiſſion of theſe Gentlemen, contribute to the hazard of the Publick Peace. And as to that of Publick Acts, he told them, He doubted not, but they would alter their Opinions, becauſe no Money could be raiſed, to ſupply the Neceſſities of the Government; nor could their own Diſſolution be, but by an Act.

The General, upon hearing this, ſeemed very much ſatisfied; upon which, all the reſt aſſented. And it was agreed, That the Secluded Members, that were in Town, ſhould, before their Admiſſion, ſign a Paper, to conſent to confine their Conſultations, chiefly to the Four Heads following.

The General and the Officers agree, upon admitting the Secluded Members.

1. To the ſettling the Conduct of the Armies, in the Three Nations, as might be moſt ſerviceable to the Peace of the Nations.

The Chief Heads recommended to their Conſultations.

2. For the providing Maintenance for the Forces by Sea and Land, and Money for their Arrears, and the Contingencies of Government.

3. To the appointing a Council of State to ſettle the Civil Government and Judicatures in Scotland and Ireland, and to take care for the Iſſuing of Writs for the Summoning of a Parliament to meet at Weſtminſter the 20th of April.

4. To their own Legal Diſſolution.

This Subſcription was willingly made, and on Tueſday following in the Morning, the General gave them a meeting at White-Hall; Whence, after a ſhort Speech to recommend to them the Settlement of the Nations, with aſſurance, That he would impoſe nothing on them, they went to take their Places in the Parliament; being Conducted thither by Captain Miller who Commanded the Guards.

The General meets them at White-Hall, in order to their Admiſſion into the Houſe.

As ſoon as the Members were gone, the General Summoned all the Officers of the Army together that were then in and about London, to conſider of a Letter to be ſent to all the Regiments in England, Scotland, and Ireland, to have their Concurrence to what had been done concerning the Admiſſion of the Secluded Members; which was referred to a Committee to be drawn up, with ſpecial Directions to ſatisfie them, That nothing was intended for alteration of Government, but that it ſhould continue as a Free State and Common-wealth: This he did, in regard he knew it impoſſible, as Affairs ſtood, to keep the Army in Temper any other way. The Letter was in a little time prepared, and ſo many Clerks were imployed, that Copies of it were that Night Signed and diſperſed to all the Regiments and Garriſons in England, and to the Commanders in Chief of the Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland. It was penn'd in theſe Words:

The Generals Letter to all the Regiments, to acquaint them with what he had done.

Dear Brethren and Fellow Souldiers,

YOu cannot be Ignorant of the many Endeavours and earneſt Deſires of many good Men in theſe Nations to bring Us to a Settlement; which it hath pleaſed God to diſappoint unto this Day, and leave Us as a broken and divided People, ready to run into Bloud and Confuſion: Which that we might prevent ſo great Calamities impending, after after our earneſt ſeeking God for his Direction and Aſſiſtance, We find no Expedient ſo likely for the ſatisfaction of the Good People, and the Quiet and Welfare of this Common-wealth, as the re-admiſſion of the Secluded Members, in order to a Legal Diſſolution of this Parliament by their own free Conſent; and to Iſſue Writs for a future full Repreſentative of the whole Common-wealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, under ſuch Qualifications as may ſecure our Cauſe, to Convene on the Twentieth day of April next at Weſtminſter, for the eſtabliſhing of this Common-wealth upon the Foundations of Juſtice and true Freedom. And to take away all juſt Jealouſies from you, We do aſſure you, That we ſhall joyn with you in the maintenance of thoſe Ends, and do expect your Chearful Concurrence with Us; having no intentions or purpoſes to return to our old Bondage; But ſince the Providence of God hath made Us free at the coſt of ſo much Bloud, we hope we ſhall never be found ſo unfaithful to God and his People, as to loſe ſo glorious a Cauſe; but We do reſolve with the Aſſiſtance of God, to adhere to you in the continuing of our dear-purchaſed Liberties, both Spiritual and Civil. The reaſon of Our proceeding in this manner may ſeem ſtrange, but if you duly conſider the neceſſities of our Affairs, and the preſent ſtate of things, you will certainly conclude nothing ſo ſafe to ſecure Publick Intereſt, and to engage the Nations peaceably to ſubmit to a Free State; moſt of the ſaid Members having given us full aſſurance, that their Seſſion in Parliament ſhall be no longer than abſolute neceſſity will require, to the putting the Government into Succeſſive Parliaments, they not being free ſo to Act by the old Writs, as when they ſhall be called upon a Common-wealth accompt: And it is the Opinion of the trueſt Friends to a Free State, That it cannot be conſiſtent with the perpetual Sitting of theſe Members, being contrary to the nature of ſuch a Government.

And as We are confident the preſent Parliament now Sitting, will not Repeal any of the Acts, Ordinances, or Orders of this preſent Parliament, for Sales, or publick Diſpoſitions of Lands; ſo We ſhall in our Station obſerve, and cauſe to be obſerved, all other Acts and Ordinances of this Parliament whatſoever, and humbly interpoſe with the next Succeeding Parliament, not only to paſs a further ACT of Confirmation of all ſuch Sales and Diſpoſitions of Lands, here and in Scotland, but alſo of the Diſtributions and Diſpoſitions of Lands and Houſes in Ireland to the Souldiery, Adventurers, or any other Perſons, made by or in purſuance of any of the Acts, Ordinances, or Orders of this preſent Parliament, or any pretended Parliamentary Authority. And We intreat you to ſend up an Officer to give to the Lord General Monk an accompt of your Acquieſcence with Us herein.

And if any diſaffected perſons ſhall take occaſion to make diſturbance of the Peace of the Common-wealth, either in favour of Charles Stuart, or any other pretended Authority, We deſire you to ſecure them till the pleaſure of the Parliament or Council of State be known in that behalf. You ſhall ſpeedily receive Encouragement and Supplies of Money; and indeed it was not the leaſt Motive to induce Us to this way of Compoſure of Affairs, that we might facilitate the raiſing of Moneys for the Subſiſtence of the Army and Navy; which would not otherwiſe have been done (if at all) but with effuſion of Bloud. We have nothing more at this time, but to aſſure you that We ſhall ever remain,

These Tranſactions were managed with ſo much Secreſie, that the Members that were ſitting in the Houſe knew nothing of them, till they ſaw the Secluded Members come in and ſit amongſt them. Upon which they being ſurprized, were at firſt at a demur among themſelves, whether they ſhould keep their Seats, or quit the Houſe; till at length the grand Sticklers of them for a Commonwealth, well knowing that it would not be in their power by ſtaying, to make their Intereſt good againſt thoſe who were now the major Party of the Houſe, reſolved, ſince they could not hinder them the partial poſſeſſion thereof, to reſign it intire unto them, while thoſe of them that were the moſt moderate and well inclined ſtaid behind, and took their Seats amongſt the new admitted Members: Who in the firſt place applied themſelves to vindicate the honour of their Houſe, as far as in them lay, by nullifying and expunging out of the Journals all Votes whereby they were diſabled from ſitting as Members therein: Next, they Order Mr. Vincent and Mr. Bromfield, and the reſt of thoſe Citizens which were committed by the Council of States Orders, when the City Gates were broken, to be releaſed; as alſo all others who were any where Impriſoned upon Sir George Booth's Riſing, or for making Addreſſes for the Admiſſion of the Secluded Members: Moreover, they Conſtituted General Monk by ACT of Parliament, Captain General of all the Armies of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and repealed that ACT which made him only a Joynt-Commiſſioner with Colonel Morley, Haſlerig, Walton, and Alured, for government of the Army.

Upon the Admiſſion of the Secluded Members, divers of the reſt quit the Houſe.

Some there were of theſe reſtored Members, who at the firſt admiſſion, could not well be preſent, by reaſon of their far diſtant Habitations; of which number was Mr. William Morrice, whom Mr. Nicholas Monk, the General's Brother, knowing him to be a Prudent Perſon, and well diſpoſed for his Prince's Service, and the good of his Country, writ to Clarges to put the General in mind of ſending for him, that being near him, he might be aſſiſtant to him in his Counſels: To this the General was eaſily perſwaded, having had long before by his Brothers report of him, a good Opinion of his Abilities and Worth; and the rather, for that by his Wife he was ſomewhat allied to him. Clarges acquainted Mr. Nicholas Monk with what he had done, and incloſed a Letter from the General to Mr. Morrice, to acquaint him with his admiſſion of the Secluded Members, and to deſire him to repair to the Parliament: Where he arrived whileſt they were Sitting, and took his place in the Houſe; wherein he appeared a moſt uſeful Inſtrument by his great Abilities, in Promoting and carrying on of the General's Affairs in relation to his Majeſties Intereſt.

The Parliament repealed the ACT for the former Council of State, and the Oath of Abjuration; and paſſed an ACT for another Council to conſiſt of One and thirty Perſons: Which were:

Moſt of them Men of Integrity, and well affected to Kingly Government.

The General hearing that Colonel Rich was about St. Edmonds-Bury, and, having actually debauch'd Two Troops, was endeavouring to corrupt the reſt of his Regiment, he ſent the Life-Guard to reduce them, and gave a Commiſſion to Colonel Ingoldsby to Command the Regiment.

The Life-Guard had been lately in defection with the reſt of the Troops under Lambert, and had not been muſtered ſince the Reſtauration of the Parliament, nor had hitherto any Commander in Chief. And therefore the General thought fit at this time to modell that Troop, and to give the Command thereof to Captain Philip Howard, making Mr. Robert Harley his Lieutenant, and his Kinſman Mr. Henry Monk, Cornet; who were ſo Active, that in Six hours time they diſplaced all of whom they had any ſuſpition, and filled up the Troop with honeſt and gallant men; who immediately marched towards Suffolk, to execute the General's Orders upon Colonel Rich; but he having notice of the marching of that Party towards him, retired privately, and the the Regiment quietly received Col. Ingoldsby to Command them, who by the General's appointment put out all such Officers as were of froward and seditious Principles in Religion or Government.

The General takes care for the settling of North-Wales.

And to reduce North-Wales to a more settled Condition, than it was in at that present, the General gave Colonel Carter a Commission to be Governour of Beaumorris Castle, (the Souldiers whereof had been placed there by Colonel John Jones) with authority to raise Forces to reduce Denbigh and Conway, which had been in very ill hands, and to settle that Country in quiet: which he did in a very short time, to the great satisfaction of all the Gentry and People in those Parts.

The late Common-wealth-Parliament before the admission of the Secluded Members, had given Desborow's Regiment to Colonel Walton; but the General disposed of it to Colonel Charles Howard of Naworth, whom he also made Governour of Carlisle.

The Parliament levy a new Tax, and proceed to the settlement of the Militia.

The Parliament passed an Act of Assessment for a Hundred Thousand Pounds a Month for Six Months, and proceeded with much haste to settle the Militia both in the City and all other Parts of England and Wales, having vacated the former ACT made before their admission, because most of the Commissioners and Officers all over England, were of Persons of suspected Inclinations to the Government.

There being at this time an unusual Confluence of Officers of the Army in London, and some Troops and Companies drawing together in several Parts of the Kingdom; The Parliament by Proclamation Commanded all Officers to repair to their respective Charges, and not to depart from thence without special Order from the Lord General: And that all such Troops and Companies as had removed from their Quarters without the Lord General's Licence, should return forthwith to their last Quarters formerly Assigned, or to such others as should be Assigned them by directions from the Lord General.

They Command all Officers and Souldiers to repair to their several Commands and Quarters.

But notwithstanding all this Care in the Parliament, Colonel Overton was designing to make Disturbances in Yorkeshire; He drew up a Letter to Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Bethell, and Colonel Smithson, which he caused to be Subscribed by all his Officers; And therein signified to them;

A Letter of Col. Overton and the Officers with him, to some of General Monk's Officers.

That having received intimation from private hands, That the abandoned Interest of Charles Stuart doth seem so to shine in the face of Publick Transactions, that many Jealousies and Dissatisfactions were created amongst their Brethren in the Army, who remained faithful to the true Cause they had contended for, insomuch, that (as it was represented to them) several Regiments had declared their disconcurrence with these present Distractions, and their Resolutions in adhering to the Cause God had determined with Victory against all Monarchical Interests, they could not but judge it incumbent upon them to wake in such a time, and to endeavour to be found in the discharge of that Duty which their Instruments Commanded from them; wherein as on the one hand they were unwilling to appear precipitate in their proceedings, so on the other they were afraid to fall short of a timely interposing of their Assistance against that old Bondage which was likely to break in anew upon them: And therefore they thought fit to expedite that Intimation unto them, and desire to understand as well what was their sense, as what was signified or imparted to them: That as they were equally engaged and concerned in one Publick Cause, so they might (if occasion required) be as conjunctively abetting and assisting to the defence of it; which through the Assistance of God they were resolved to assert and maintain (as the fruits of their Bloud, the Nations Treasure, and the Prayers of the People of God against any design whatsoever which threatned the ruine of their Civil and Religious Rights.

Many Copies of this Letter were dispersed amongst the Souldiers before the Original was sent, and an Attestation added in these words, This is Overton's and the Officers of the Garrison of Hulls Letter: And it is hoped, will meet with the Concurrence of all our honest Fellow-Souldiers who have been engaged in the Good Old Cause against the Interest of a King and Single Person.

If Colonel Fairfax, Smithson, and Bethell had not been very Active, this practice had perverted many Souldiers; but they were vigilant to prevent it. Upon knowledge of this Letter, the General writ to Overton by Colonel Allured and Major Smith, to give him Satisfaction in his proceedings here; and the Council of State upon his Motion did the like. Major Smith was well known and beloved in Hull, and, the General having a Design to Remove Overton, he was privately to deal with some Officers and Souldiers under him who loved him not, to bring him to Reason, if upon Orders for his Remove, he should be disobedient to them; And as soon as they were gone, he sent private Orders to Colonel Fairfax, (to whom he gave a Commission to be Governour of Hull) to draw some Companies to Beverley, and Writ to Overton to repair immediately to him, his Letter was sent to Colonel Fairfax open, open, that he might see the Import of it. The Letter was in the following Words:

SIR,

The General's Letter to Colonel Overton.

I Have seen a Letter from you and some others at Hull, dated from that Garrison on the 28th of February last, and directed to Colonel Fairfax, Colonel Bethell, and Colonel Smithson; wherein you Complain of the present Transactions of the Publick Affairs, as if they tended to the bringing in of the King and a Monarchical Bondage, which (you write) seems very likely to break in anew upon us, and threatens the ruine of our Civil and Religious Rights: All which, you say, is derived to you from private hands, which do not only insinuate their private Jealousies, but inform you that several Regiments have declared their disconcurrence with the present Transactions. I must confess, I am a little Surprized at this your Letter and manner of Proceedings, having so lately sent to you from my Self and the greatest part of the Officers of the Army, a full Accompt of the Necessities that induced us, to consent to the return of the Secluded Members to the exercise of their Trust; and our Resolutions to that Cause we have so long contended for, and to the Parliament in the prosecution of it: And (notwithstanding the Information you pretend to have received) I cannot in my own observation discern any Grounds for such Apprehensions of Affairs here as you seem to entertain: nor has there appeared a discontent in any one Regiment of the Army, except part of Colonel Rich's Regiment, which is since reduced: wherefore (although you pretend not to be too precipitate in your proceedings) your dispersing Copies of your Letter before you sent it, may reasonably make me judge otherwise: And if you prosecute the matter further, I cannot but interpret your Action as tending to divide the Army, by withdrawing their Obedience from the Parliament, and consequently to involve the Nations in a new and bloudy War. So that to avoid all occasions of this nature, I desire that within twenty four hours after this Letter comes to your hands, you set forward from Hull towards London, to give me an accompt of the present posture of that Garrison; And that within Six hours after this comes to you, you signifie to Colonel Fairfax, and Colonel Bethell, your Compliance herein, and the Day wherein you intend to begin your Journey, and be with me here, where I shall expect you within a Week after your departure from Hull. I have written to Colonel Fairfax more particularly concerning the Peace and Safety of the Northern Parts, and of the Garrison of Hull; and if he Communicates any Orders from me to you, I expect your obedience to them,

Yours,

George Monk.

Colonel Overton was surprized at the receipt of this Letter, but finding himself in no Capacity to dispute the Order for his delivery up of Hull, he submitted to it; And sent to Colonel Fairfax to acquaint him with that his Resolution; And himself at Eleven of the Clock, the same Night, began his Journey towards London to the General.

The Colonel submits to the General's Orders.

The General about the same time gave his Commission to Mr. Clarges to be Commissary General of the Musters of England, Scotland, and Ireland; and to Mr. Morrice to be Governour of Plymouth; and to Major General Morgan to be Commander in Chief of the Army in Scotland.

Morgan was already upon the place, but wanted sufficient authority, till he had this Commission sent to him; and all the Army there submitted there to the General's Actions in reference to the Secluded Members, except a Company in Garrison in the Isle of Orkney Commanded by one Watson, which was reduced by Captain Man, and Watson and his Officers imprisoned, and his Company disbanded.

The Army in Scotland well satisfied with the General's Actions.

Many private Overtures were made to the General by some of the Peers that sate in the Lords House a little before the death of the late King, to be admitted to Sit; but he thought it inconvenient and hazardous, in regard the Army was already so Jealous upon the Sitting of the Secluded Members, that he had difficulty enough to moderate them. Yet at the Request of the Earl of he sent Commissary General Clarges to Confer with him.

The Earl told him, The Sitting of the Lords would be very advantageous to the good of the Kingdom, and to the Souldiers in particular; for that they would Joyn in an ACT for the Confirmation of their Estates: And if it should be thought convenient for the good of the Kingdom to receive the King, he could not upon any Conditions with so much safety be restored, as such as should be made by Act of Parliament.

A Conference between Commissary Clarges and a Peer of the Land, about the Sitting of the Lords House.

To

To this Clarges Replied, That the General was very well ſatisfied, that the Parliament was Diſſolved by the Death of the late King; and that the preſent Sitting of the Members, was a Conſtitution rather taken up upon Neceſſity, than Right, which was but to make way for another Parliament; That one great Argument for the Admiſſion of the Secluded Members, was their Conſent to a quick Diſſolution; which could not be, if the Lords ſhould Sit: For they would then think themſelves inveſted in that perpetuity which ſome fancy is of right in this Parliament ſtill. But that which was moſt convincing, was, That the Army was not yet in temper for it.

Every Poſt brought the General Addreſſes from all the Regiments in England, of their Conſent to his Actings: And Sir Charles Coot in Ireland had with many other Officers upon the ſame day that the Secluded Members were admitted, declared at Dublin for them, and had ſecured Sir Hardreſs Waller, that had diſſented from him.

An Act propoſed for the ſettling of Hampton-Court upon the General.

Thoſe of the former Members who ſtaid in the Houſe after the admiſſion of the Secluded Members, that they might ingage the General againſt the King, promoted an ACT for the ſettling of Hampton-Court, with all the Parks and ſome other Lands upon him and his Heirs for ever; which ſo troubled him, that he uſed all the Friends he had to divert it; and at laſt an Expedient was found out, by giving him, by Act of Parliament, a Preſent of Twenty Thouſand Pounds in Money, and the Cuſtody or Stewardſhip of that Houſe, and the Parks for his life; They alſo Conferred upon Commiſſary Clarges the Hamper-Office: And about the 13th of March they Ordered, That the Engagement, appointed to be taken by each Member of Parliament, in theſe words, (viz.) I do declare and promiſe, That I will be true and faithful to the Common-wealth of England, as the ſame is now eſtabliſhed without King or Houſe of Lords, ſhould be taken off the File and made null.

The Engagement abrogated.

Scot, Haſlerig, and ſome others, (whoſe names we ſhall forbear to mention, becauſe they are yet living, and have repented of the raſhneſs of their former Proceedings) were much Alarm'd at this proceeding, which they took to be an inevitable Prognoſtick of introducing the King; and though they ſo much affected Power, as to endure no Rivals in it, they choſe rather to have the General take the Dominion of the Three Kingdoms upon himſelf than to have the King reſtored: They conſulted privately with ſome of the Officers of the Army, whom they truſted moſt, and theſe approved ſo well of the Expedient, That the General was Treated with about it in White-Hall; Where Haſlerig told him, That many of his Friends were much troubled at the Parliaments Actions, which tended both to the ruine of him and all the good People of the Nation, ſince it was evident that by what they had Voted the day before, nothing was intended but the reſtitution of the King. His overthrow, they ſaid, muſt needs ſucceed the admiſſion of the King; for a Merit too great to be Rewarded, could have no recompenſe but death; whereof frequent Examples are to be found in all Hiſtory, and in none more pregnant than our own, where it is Recorded, That the ſame Stanley who placed the Crown upon Henry the Seventh's Head, had his own Head ſtruck off, upon a very frivolous pretenſe, when the reaſon was only exceſs of Merit. They told him likewiſe, They found a Common-wealth-Government not agreeable with the diſpoſition of the People, who are always bad Judges of what is beſt for themſelves, and therefore ſince a Single Perſon was neceſſary, there could not be one fitter than he for that Office. To which they had very good grounds to believe all the good People of the Nation would concur with them.

The Common-wealth Faction deſire the General rather to take the Government upon himſelf, than to bring in the King.

They Treat with him about it.

The General told them, He himſelf was not well pleaſed at the late unneceſſary Vote of Parliament concerning the Engagement; but many of the moſt diſcreet Members had been with him, and ſatisfied him, That they had no deſign in it, but to keep themſelves free againſt the next Parliament; for in regard (they ſaid) that he had conſented that the final determination of Government ſhould be referred to that, they were unwilling to anticipate their Counſels by determining of it by that Engagement; which would be too great a Snare unto them: Still urging, That they knew not any cauſe he ſhould have of fear, for that the very Writ of Summons of the next Parliament, did ſufficiently defend the Government, in reſtraining their Debates to it. As for the Government in his own Perſon, he ſaid, The experience of Cromwell's Fate gave him Reaſons to avoid the Rock on which that Family was ſplit.

They Replied, That Oliver Cromwel uſurped the Dominion againſt the Suffrage of the Army, and the Conſent of all the good People; whereas he ſhould have it by their unanimous conſent, and under what Name and Title he pleaſed to accept it.

The General refuſeth their Offer.

The General would by no means hear more of theſe Temptations, reſolving not to loſe the Honour derived to him from as Ancient a Stock of Gentry as any was in England, by ſo treacherous a Proſtitution of it.

A little before theſe Men went to the General, Commiſſary Clarges had been tampered with by them, to the ſame purpoſe; and obſerving them to go from him to his Lordſhip, he deliberated how to extricate him from further applications of this kind, and puniſh the Inſolency of theſe undertakers.

Commiſſary Clarges gives intimation of theſe proceedings to the Council of State.

The Council of State Sitting at the time of this private Conference, and within two Chambers of the place where it was Tranſacted; he ſent in to the Council to Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, and informed him of what he knew, and what he further ſuſpected: Upon which it was agreed, That as ſoon as the General ſhould depart from them, and come into the Council, he ſhould move, That all Clerks and Attendants, that were not Counſellours, ſhould withdraw, and the Doors be lock'd, and then declare, That he had had Information of a dangerous Deſign in ſome ſeditious perſons who who were contriving to make Disturbances in the Nation, and that they had proceeded so far as to make some indecent Overtures to him, of which he desired that the Council might receive a full discovery, that thereupon they might apply themselves to prevent the Consequences of it.

The General in favour of those Persons mitigates the matter.

But the General being unwilling to expose those men to ruine, (though they deserved not his favour) because his Purposes were designed to be effected by the most peaceable ways, told the Council, That there was not so much danger in agitation as they apprehended; but that it was true, some had been with him to be resolved in scruples concerning the present Transactions in Parliament, but they went away from him well satisfied.

They yet attempted to make a Mutiny in the Army.

Thus the goodness of the General was abused; for these unreasonable men, when they saw they could not allure him to their ends by the temptation of power, attempted to make a Mutiny in the Army; wherein they prevailed so far, as that the Officers had had one Meeting, and had appointed another. In their first, they were so heated, that a Declaration was immediately prepared, and brought by some of them to the General, to oblige him with his Army to declare for a Common-wealth, and engage against all them that should attempt the setting up of a Single Person; And that he should send to the Parliament to joyn with them in this Declaration.

A Declaration brought by the Officers to the General to Sign.

Commissary Clarges and Mr. Clark, the General's Secretary, were with him when this was brought to him, and observing great trouble in his Countenance at the reading of it, moved, That he would defer the signing or giving any opinion of it till the next Morning, because then the Officers of the Army were to have a General Council. This was done, that the General might have time to provide himself of Arguments against it, and prepare some of his Friends to joyn with him: One of the chief Motives that induced him to make Mr. Morrice an Officer of the Army, was to have his aid in Consultations at such times as these: For there were frequent Meetings of Officers; and one of so good Judgment and Elocution as he, could not but perswade much: So that he had been the fittest Person that could have been thought on, had not his being unused to such Assemblies made him not care to be present at them.

Okey's Speech at the Council of Officers.

The next Morning a great Concourse of Officers met at St. James's; And Colonel Okey opened the Council, with a long Speech, of the fears they were in of an Inundation of Evils breaking in upon them, to invade their Civil and Religious Liberties; and that if great Care was not used to prevent it, Charles Stuart would be introduced: And that the best Expedient that could be thought of, was to send immediately to the Parliament, to oblige them to declare and engage for a Free-State and Common-wealth, without a King or House of Lords: And if they refused to do it, to take such a Remedy as God should put into their hearts to save the Nation from destruction.

Commissary Clarges Answered, That he saw no Cause for those fears that were insinuated; and that if they sent to the Parliament in such a manner, they would find no pleasing return from them; for if these Men would have been terrified by the Army, there would not have been fourteen of them Impeached at one time of Treason, and Two hundred Secluded at another; and the first thing they would probably do, upon the receipt of such a Message, would be to Dissolve themselves, and then there would be no Government; but instead of the Single Person they were so much afraid of, they must necessarily have recourse to Richard Cromwel, and expose themselves to his Revenge, for the Indignities they had lately with so much scorn put upon him and his Family. Commissary Clarges his Answer.

And as for the General (applying himself to him) he said, He knew he would not assume the Government, having heard him profess, (on occasion of these Alterations) he would rather be drawn in pieces with wild horses than be so treacherous to the Nation.

The General's determination of the matter.

The General concluded, and told them, The time of this Parliaments ending was so near, they could not do the ills some of them (he hoped) causelesly feared; And that from the next Parliament he doubted not they would receive better satisfaction than they had in this, since it was provided in the ACT for their Assembling, That none should be Elected that had been against the Parliament since 1641. Withal, he confirmed what Commissary Clarges had said, That if by this violent proceeding they should make the Parliament hastily Dissolve themselves, and leave the Nation in Confusion, they must not expect he would take upon him the Government, which he had rather lose his life than accept.

After this, there was little moved by any of the Officers; Only one said, That nothing could be hoped from Qualifications for a new Parliament; for they themselves being to be Judges of them, it might so happen, that the major part might be of such as were not themselves Qualified.

The General knew this to be an unanswerable Argument, (and it was for this reason he pressed for a new Parliament on any terms) but was unwilling to hear more discourse of this kind, and therefore told them, Nothing was more injurious to Discipline, than their meeting in Military Councills to interpose in Civil things. And from that time he forbad them to assemble again; and within a few days after, that is to say, On the Seventeenth of March, the Parliament by Act dissolved it self, having before summoned a Parliament to succeed them the 25th day of April following.

Monsieur

The Conference between Monsieur de Bordeaux, and Commissary Clarges.

Monsieur de Bordeaux the French Embassador then Resident in London, was very desirous to interesse Cardinal Mazarini, in this great Revolution of Government, and having had acquaintance with Clarges, expected by him to discover all the Generalls Designs; and in order thereunto, sent his Secretary to him, To desire him to move the Generall, to have Licence to give him a visit, and to confer about some overtures he had to make to him.

Clarges, upon this intimation, went to the Embassador, who carried him into his Closet, and they two being alone, he told him; 'That it was 'visible to all, that the General had some great 'Design in projection, and that most wise men be-'liev'd it was, either to advance himself to the 'Monarchy of these Nations, or introduce the 'King; and that in either of these, he had the ad-'vantage of being more serviceable to him then 'any other; for if he should use any Englishman 'in so important an Intrique, if he should not 'have success that would be brought in evidence 'against him to his distruction: Whereas if he as 'a stranger, and a publique Minister could not 'be questioned. He further said, 'What he pro-'pos'd, was not only in reference to himself, but 'to Cardinal Mazarini, who would be glad to 'have the honour of his friendship, assist him 'faithfully in all his purposes. He said moreover, 'That he could not undertake to determine, 'Whether it was not best for him to dignifie his 'Family with the Empire of these Kingdoms, or 'to restore the King to them; They were both 'actions of much glory; and if the latter were 'as easie, the honour of it would be as great: 'But that he might be confident of the Cardinal, 'he did assure him, that Oliver Cromwell kept so 'strict a League with him, that he did not assume 'the government without his privity, and was di-'rected step by step by him in the progress of 'that action: And therefore, if he resolved on 'that course, he should not only have the Car-'dinals friendship and Counsel in the attempt, 'but a safe retreat and honourable support in 'France, if he failed in it. Or if he would admit 'the King, and put the manner of it into the Car-'dinals hands, whatever he would desire for him-'self of Security, or honour from the Crown, 'he would undertake to obtain, and in such a 'manner, that it should rather seem by the Car-'dinals advice, then his particular Inclination; 'and the King would gladly receive it, and France 'should be the place to which (if he agreed) 'the King should presently retreat; where he 'should have a Train provided proportionable to 'his greatness, that his People here might, with 'greater Reverence, apply themselves to him; 'and by this way (he said) the General might not 'only obliege the King of England, but the 'King his Master also, by making him a Media-'tor and Instrument in his Restauration.

To this Clarges answered, 'That the matter 'was too deep for him to be involv'd in, in re-'gard (as he himself had acknowledged) of the 'danger of having such a secret known to any se-'cond Person a Native of England.

'But nevertheless, to satisfie him, he assured 'him, That the General did not intend to take 'upon him the government, but submit all to the 'determination of the next Parliament.

He then replyed, 'That a Parliament in En-'gland was a kind of tumultuary Council, so va-'rious in their Debates, that no certain measure 'could be taken from them, and therefore for 'not taking this course which he advis'd, he 'might be hurried by their froward proceedings, 'to some sudden Enterprise, neither safe for 'himself, nor good for the people, and that 'with him, in any misfortune, all his Relations 'would be ruin'd.

To this Conference, Clarges put an end, by telling him, 'He would take a suddain occasion 'to sound the Generals Inclinations; and though 'he would not directly tell him what had pass'd 'betwixt them, he should nevertheless gues, 'whether it might be fit for him to impart it to 'him; the only difficulty that remain'd, was 'the Generals want of the French Tongue; Which the Ambassador said, 'Was not neces-'sary, for that he had English enough to be un-'derstood, and to understand all that should be said 'to him; and thus they parted.

The General refuseth to treat with the Embassador, or the Cardinal.

Clarges told all that pass'd to Mr. Morrice, and to the General himself, who absolutely re-fus'd to have any Commerce with the Ambassa-dor or the Cardinal; nevertheless, that he might not appear uncivil, he was contended to receive his Visit, but on Condition, That he should not propose any thing to him in reference to the publick affairs of Government.

This was signified to the Ambassador, and he came that Evening to complement the Gene-ral, making great professions of his Services to him, on all occasions, without descending to particulars.

The manner of Sir John Greenvill's ap-plication to the General.

Much more successfull was the Application made by Sir John Greenvill, who being an active Agent for the King, and a neer Kinsman to the General, was therefore by his Majesty thought a fit person to be imployed to him; but he know-ing the wary temper of the General, was much troubled how to get access to him; till bethink-ing himself of Mr. Morrice, his Neighbour in the Countrey, a person often conversant with the General, he concluded by his mediation to do it, and thereupon requested him to let the Ge-neral know, he had something of great Impor-tance to impart to him, and desired he would give him the opportunity to do it.

When Mr. Morrice inform'd the General of this, he receiv'd it with much strangeness; for although Sir John was his near Relation; yet by reason of his youth, and the Generals long ab-sence from his Countrey, they had little acquain-tance with each other, and therefore he told Mr. Morrice, Except he would send him informa-tion by him, of the nature of his business, he could not admit of any intercourse with him.

Mr. Morrice told him, He had already desired to know that, but Greenville refused it. The Ge-neral in his mind, liked well of this reservedness in Sir John, and bid Mr. Morrice acquaint him, That if he came the next day at nine in the evening to St. James's, he would speak with him. And ac-cordingly Greenville came to him, at the ap-pointed time, which was the next evening, after the dissolution of the Parliament.

His reception.

When he came, after he had requested Par-don for the importunity of his visit, he desired his permission to deliver a Message he had to him 1659. from his Majesty. The Generall seem'd surpriz'd at this saying, but seeing that there was no body in the Room but Mr. Morrice, and he at a good distance from them, he bid him say what he pleas'd.

He delivers his Message. He then presented to him a Letter from the King, and told him, 'That his Majesty had great 'Confidence in his affections to him, and since he 'had complyed so far with the desires of all the 'sober part of the Kingdom, for the admission of 'the Secluded Members, in order to a free Parliament; The consequences of that could not but 'give sufficient evidence of his Inclinations to his 'Majesties Service and Restitution, which would 'naturally flowe from his Endeavours, in Con'junction with their Councels.

The Generals Answer. The General replyed, 'That he had long la'mented the miserable distractions of his Native 'Countrey, and waited a fit occasion to contri'bute his assistance to the Redemption of it. And 'when Lambert and those with him had inter'rupted the Parliament; Considering that the 'Army had been newly in a great measure by 'that Parliament modell'd; he supposed by a De'claration for their Restitution he might gain a 'Power in his hands for better purposes, and, as 'the better to bring these his purposes about, he 'resolv'd if by his Arms the Parliament should be 'restored, together, with those few Members 'which sate at their interruption, to admit those 'also who had been secluded; intending to that end, 'by degrees, to put his Army into such hands as 'would favour his intentions; that it was well 'known to all, How he was disappointed in that 'design, and through what difficulties he arrived 'to the Station he was then in, nor was he even 'at that time secure from great danger of disap'pointment, if he should not manage his af'fairs with more then ordinary secresie.

'As to the Kings Majesty (he said) None 'wish'd him greater felicity than he, nor desired 'his Restauration with more passion; but if it 'were not cautiously attempted, it would be out 'of his Power to serve him in it, since in Coun'cels of so nice concernment, there would not be 'room for two Errors. The People he told him, 'had been long seduc'd by seditious insinuations, 'and the Army in the hands of such, as had al'wayes been against his Royal Father, and many 'of them even against Monarchy it self; but ne'vertheless, he hoped, if they might find the same 'security under his Majesties Government, as 'they had under the Usurpers of it, he might not 'despair of their reduction to obedience. And to 'effect this, it was his humble advice, that his 'Majesty should prevent their fears, by decla'ring a free and general Pardon to all his Sub'jects, and engage himself to give it under the 'Great Seal, to all that should submit to his Au'thority, except such as should be exempted by 'the Parliament.

'And that he would consent to any Act or 'Acts of Parliament, that should be presented to 'him for the settlement of publique Sales and 'Dispositions of Lands, to Officers, Souldiers, and 'others; and the payment of the Souldiers Ar'rears; As also for toleration of Liberty of Con'science to all his Subjects, And that none should 'be punished for differences in matters of Reli'gion, who should not disturb the publique Peace.

Sir John asked him, 'What he would give 'him in Command for himself, and if he would 'write to his Majesty? Which he excused at that time, saying, 'If his Letter should be intercepted 'before he had compleated the Reforming the 'Armies, it would be impossible for him to keep 'them in temper, or hinder the subversion of 'all he had hitherto done; Adding, That he 'sought not his own advantage in his Endeavours 'for the publique benefit of his Countrey; and 'that having with much hazard, brought matters 'near to a fair issue, in pursuance of the general 'suffrage of the Nations, he was unwilling, by in'discretion, to venture a relapse, but would choose 'to involve himself in the same Condition with 'the generality of the People, in expectation of 'what the next Parliament should bring forth, to 'the happiness of his Majesty, & all his Kingdoms.

A farther discourse between them, confirming the sincerity of the Generals Intentions.

Sir John Greenville writ down the substance of this Discourse, and repeated it to the General, to be the better able to retain it in his Memory; but as soon as he had read it, he entreated him to tear it in pieces, and conjur'd him to acquaint no person whatsoever with their Conference, except the King himself, and to request him also to conceal it. But above all things, he intreated him, To desire his Majesty from him, to go out of the King of Spains Dominions, to Breda, or some other place under the Government of the States of the United Provinces; for that he had certain Intelligence, he would be detained by the King of Spains Ministers, if he stayd in his Dominions.

And at Sir John's parting from him, he told him, He was glad that this occasion of presenting his Duty to the King, was an effect of his diligence, whom he was glad to find so industrious and vigilant in his Masters Service: of which he had before some experience when his Brother Nicolas came from him into Scotland.

Sir John takes his Journey towards Bruxels. He promis'd to observe all the Generals Instructions; and when he came to Ostend (where he arriv'd the 23th of March) he put all that had passed betwixt them into Writing, and digested it into form, to be presented to his Majesty. And in the Conduct of the whole affair, he was so secret, that the Lord Mordant, who went over with him to his Majesty, knew nothing of it.

He gives his Majesty an account of his Negotiation, and the effects thereof. At Bruxels he retired to a private house, to which his Majesty (upon intimation) very secretly repaired, and with great satisfaction receiv'd the Intelligence he brought; but because he could not prosecute the Generals desire (as to his removal) without advice for the manner of executing it, he consulted the Marquis of Ormond, the Lord Chancellor, and Mr. Secretary Nicholas, being persons in whom, from just reason and experience, he had most intire confidence, by whose assistance the matter was so order'd, that in two or three dayes, he took his Journey to Breda; where we shall leave his Majesty in Consultation, to return to the Transactions in England of that busie time.

The King removes to Breda.

The Council of State took care to have the Act put into speedy execution throughout England, for the Election of Members to serve in Parliament, and for putting the Militia into sober hands: And because many seditious People were endeavouring to debauch the Army, they published a Proclamation to forbid all persons whatsoever, to correspond with any of the Officers and Souldiers

The Council of State set forth a Proclamation for the preventing of tumults and disturbances.

Souldiers of the Army in the way of agitating, or otherwiſe, whereby any diſſatisfaction might be raiſed towards the preſent government, to endanger the peace of the Nation, giving power to all Officers, both Military and Civil, to ſeize upon any Perſons offending as aforeſaid: And for the better encouragement of all whom it ſhould concern, they declared, and promiſed to give to the diſcoverer of any ſuch perſon, who ſhould apprehend and ſecure ſuch offenders, the ſumm of ten pounds. And this Proclamation was ordered to be publiſhed in the Head of every Regiment, Troop, and Company of the Army, to the intent, the ſame ſhould be the better taken notice of, and put in more effectual execution: And the General ſent it to every Regiment to be proclaimed accordingly. But this did not ſufficiently prevent the ill humours amongſt the Souldiers, which made Commiſſary Clarges conſult privately with the General, about ſome other more effectual courſe; he propos'd to frame an Engagement for all to ſubſcribe, to acquieſce in whatſoever the next Parliament ſhould do, and to diſplace all that ſhould refuſe: His Lordſhip liked very well of this Propoſition, but thought it very hard to be executed; nevertheleſs, he encouraged him to go on, and that night he alone fram'd it, and immediately advis'd with Colonel Howard, Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, Mr. Anſley, and Colonel Knight (who all of them with one conſent approved it, being all Perſons of great Credit with the General) about the putting it in execution; Colonel Knight undertook by the next day at noon, to get it Signed by all the Officers of his own Regiment, and the Generals Regiment of Horſe, and the Life-guard; and Collonel Howard did the like for his Regiment which lay about Croydon, for he had ſo modell'd it, that he was ſure of all his Officers; all which by the foreſaid time, being accordingly effected, they met together, at Sir Anthony Aſhley-Coopers Lodging, and glad to ſee their buſineſs ſo well advanc'd by the ſubſcription of theſe three Regiments, they in the next place, thought it expedient to have the Officers of all the Regiments in London, to be ſummon'd to meet that Evening at St. James's; which was accordingly done, and they being all met, It was mov'd to them by Collonel Knight.

Commiſſary Clarges drawes up an Ingagement to be ſubſcrib'd for acquieſcing in the determinations of the next Parliament.

The Officers of 3. Regiments ſubſcribe it.

The ſubſtance of Col. Knights Speech to the Officers at St. James's, incouraging them to ſubſcribe the Ingagement.

That at this time, when ſeveral Imputations lay upon the Army of Inconſtancy, and that many Diſaffected Perſons were endeavouring to divide them, it was requiſite they ſhould give ſome publique Teſtimony of their Affections and Inclinations; and in order thereunto, ſome Officers having ſhew'd him an Addreſs, which they had framed to be preſented to the General, to teſtifie their Reſolution of Obedience and Duty, to the Powers God had placed over them; He could not but approve ſo well of it, as readily by himſelf, and all his Officers, to give their Atteſtations to it, and ſome more had done the like, it being intended by thoſe who firſt adviſ'd it, to be tendred to every Regiment of the Army; of which, there being a great part here, they had by the Generals Permiſſion invited them thither, to communicate what was done, and to deſire their Concurrence with them in it.

Collonel Knight and Clarges had before prepared moſt of the Officers of the Regiments which came from Scotland, ſo that they made no difficulty of it, eſpecially ſeeing a Subſcription of other Regiments to induce them; Moreover, it was intimated, That their Meeting was by the privity and permiſſion of the General, which Obligation they knew none would offer to oppoſe. The Addreſs was immediatly read, being in theſe words:

The Form of the Armies Ingagement.

WE E the Officers of the Army, under your Excellencies Command, whoſe Names are hereunto written, being truly ſenſible of the merciful and wonderful Providence of Almighty God, in bringing Us, after ſo many Revolutions and Changes, into an hopeful way of Settlement; and perceiving, to our great grief, that there are too many, who ſeeking more their own private Intereſt, than the Publique Good, are endeavouring to reduce us again to our old Neceſſities and Confuſions; and that they have proceeded ſo far, as to cauſe Jealouſies in the Council of State, in whom the Supream Power and Truſt, now, till the Meeting of the Parliament, is reſiding, Do hold it our Duties, for the preventing of all ſuch Jealouſies for the future, and for the ſtrengthning of your Excellencies Hands, in the carrying on of this Good Work, in which it hath pleaſed God to make you ſo highly Inſtrumental, humbly to make this Addreſs unto your Excellency, in the Name of our ſelves, and all the Souldiers under our Command, and to Declare, That We ſhall, according to our Duties, carry and behave our ſelves, as Officers of an Army inſtructed by your Example and Diſcipline, to obey, and not to diſpute the Orders of our Superiours, and ſhall freely and readily obſerve ſuch Commands, as we ſhall receive from your Excellency, or the Council of State, or the Parliament when Aſſembled: And, in particular, we ſhall, according to the late Proclamation of the Council of State, of the 17th of March, decline any Meeting or Meetings, for the contriving or carrying on of any Declaration or Subſcriptions, concerning Affaires of State, or Government, thereby avoiding thoſe Miſchiefs, which made many lately in Arms, ſo juſtly diſtaſtful to the People, by making themſelves a divided Intereſt from the reſt of them, And we are the more willing to make this Addreſs at this time, to evince to all the World the Integrity of our Obedience, becauſe of the great Expectation of the next Parliament, from whom we hope for a happy Settlement to all the Nations; And that they may have no ill Apprehenſions of Us, We are reſolv'd, as it becomes Us in Duty, to ſubmit to whatſoever the Lord ſhall bring forth from their Conſultations, knowing that Parliaments only can ſecure Us in our Religious and Civil Rights: And foraſmuch as many Repreſentations heretofore made to Perſons in Eminent Authority, have been too frequently contriv'd in the Name of the Army, which were done rather in Formality, (as we perceive by the Event) than otherwiſe; We do ſolemnly deſire, that this may be Recorded as a Teſtimony and Witneſs againſt Us, if ever We ſhall be guilty of any ſuch Backſlidings.

The Addreſs ſigned by all the Officers about London; and thoſe of two other Regiments.

At that very time, this Ingagement was ſigned by Lieutenant-Collonel Morgan, and all the Officers of the Generals Regiment of Foot; by Collonel Hubblethorn, and all the Officers of his Regiment; by Collonel Cloberry, Collonel Lydcott, Collonel Read, and the reſt, with all their Officers; which made up in all, with thoſe that had ſign'd before, Ten Regiments of Horſe and Foot, beſides the Life-guard, and all the General-Officers. Alſo, Collonel Fairfax, and Collonel Bethel, who upon the firſt Conſultation of this Matter had been ſent unto, in four dayes had return'd the Subſcriptions of themſelves, and all their Officers; after which it was agreed, That Collonel Howard, with fourty Officers, ſhould preſent it to the General; which was done at St. James's the 9th Day of April, and was with much ſatisfaction and content received by him: It was alſo afterwards recommended to Major-General Morgan in Scotland, to have it ſubſcribed by his Officers there, and likewiſe to all the Regiments in England, with an Accompt of what had bin done in London, and the Names of all thoſe Regiments that had concurr'd it.

Preſented to the General by Col. Howard. Sent into Scotland to M. General Morgan.

Two more Regiments ſent into Scotland.

And becauſe he heard that ſome diſaffected Perſons were tampering to ſeduce the Souldiers in Scotland, he ſent another Regiment of Horſe, and a Regiment of Foot thither, who were of ſuch as Major-General Morgan might confide in, to aſſiſt him, if need were, to model the reſt. In concluſion, this Addreſs was ſubſcribed by all the Regiments, and the Subſcriptions return'd to the General; only ſome Officers refus'd it, and were immediately diſplac'd, and the General took that opportunity, of giving to the Lord Faulconbridge, Collonel Roſſiter, and General Mountague, to each of them a Regiment of Horſe, and to Collonell Sheffield a Regiment of Foot. And whileſt he was thus employ'd in ordering the Army, the Council of State was active in forming the Militia, in all the Cities and Counties of England and Wales, wherein ſuch care was taken, to have the Arms in good Hands, that from all Parts the Liſts of the Officers were ſent to the Council of State, to be by the General and them approv'd.

All diſaffected Officers diſplac'd, and others put in their rooms.

Theſe Preparations enraged many Factious People to deſign againſt the government, in ſo much that on the Evening of that Day, wherein Collonel Howard preſented the above-mentioned Addreſs to the General, Collonel Lambert having made an Eſcape out of the Tower, was conceal'd by ſome of that Party, that had been lately ingaged againſt General Monck, and ſome others of Fanatique Principles: Theſe held a Council in London, but were not ſo private in their Conſultations, but the General had from time to time intimation of much of their Proceedings. They ſent ſome buſie men to all the Regiment in England, and theſe Officers that refus'd the Addreſs, had intic'd many of the Troopers to ſteal after them; but ſuch was the vigilance of the reſt of the Officers, that there got not above Seven or Eight Troops of Horſe in a Body to joyn with Lambert, and but one Company of Foot.

Lambert eſcapes out of the Tower.

The General takes great care for the ſuppreſſing of Lambert.

On Wedneſday the 18th of April, the General, upon Advice from Colonel Streater, of Lamberts hovering in the North Parts, and of the want of Horſe in his Quarters; ſent for Collonel Ingoldsby to him, and told him, He muſt be at Northampton with his Regiment on the Saturday following; and that he ſhould receive Orders to take any of Collonel Roſſiters Troops to his Aſſiſtance, which quartered in thoſe Parts: He alſo told him, That Collonel Streater, a Perſon whom he could Truſt, was with ſome of his Companies at Northampton, whom he would find ready to joyn with him. The Collonel told him, That his Regiment was diſperſed in Norfolk and Suffolk, but he would do his endeavours to get them together. And he was ſo diligent herein, that by the Friday following he got his Regiment to Cambridge, and on Saturday in the Evening to Northampton.

The General alſo ſent Collonel Howard with his Regiment, and ſome other ſelect Troops, towards Worceſter-ſhire and Warwick ſhire, to hinder any Defection of the Troops in thoſe Parts, and to have an Eye towards Coventry, which Lambert had deſign'd to Garriſon; and indeed he had done it, had not the Care of the General prevented it, by Ordering three Companies of Colonel Streaters's Regiment to Quarter in that City: The Colonel alſo ſending one Company more to ſtrengthen that Place, who in their March met with a Party of Horſe, among whom was one who having been Major to that Regiment, ſhewed them Lambert's Orders, to march back again: But the Lieutenant that was Intruſted with the Command of that Company, obſerving the Collonel's Orders, marched intire with great ſpeed, ſtood upon his defence, and oppoſed them Twice in his march thither.

The Council of State by Proclamation, declar'd Lambert and his Adherents Traytors, and the General was careful the very next day after his getting out of Priſon, to give Notice of it to all the Regiments and Troops, to prevent his Deſign of ſeducing them, and to command them to ſeize on him: By which Diligence, and the ſending theſe Parties out, his Confederates were interrupted in their Endeavours. One Merry, a Disbanded diſcontented Officer of Col. Smithſon's Regiment, had inticed fourty of Captain Peverel's Troop to revolt, with Deſign to ſeize on York, but by the care of other Troops they were diſſipated; and one Everard, and Captain Lockier, two diſcontented Officers, that had been lately in Cuſtody, and releas'd upon their Engagement, not to act any thing in Diſturbance of the Publique Peace, did nevertheleſs march through Nottingham, with a Seditious Troop of their Companions.

Whereof Captain Sherman of Collonel Sanders his Regiment, having notice, drew out his own Troop, and that of Captain Craddocks of Hackers Regiment, to engage them; but immediately Craddocks Troop joyned with the Enemy, which made Sherman (finding himſelf too weak for them) to retreat to Nottingham, to ſecure that place, where the Mayor, Aldermen, and Gentry, gave him ready aſſiſtance. This Newes made the General give Orders, That the late Addreſs ſigned by the Officers, ſhould be tendred to all the private Souldiers alſo, which made ſo through a Reformation, that in many Regiments Thirty of a Troop disbanded, rather than they would conſent to it, and many in the Foot Companies alſo left their Arms: But in all the General's Regiments in London, that marched with him from Scotland, there were but two Diſſenters.

On Eaſter-Eave, Collonel Ingoldsby joyned with Collonel Streater at Northampton; where he was at that time, and had been ſome dayes before, The Earl of Exceter who with ſeveral Loyal Gentlemen of that County, to the number of near near one hundred Horſe, with much Reſolution offered to aſſiſt Colonel Streater: Likewiſe the Trained Bands of that Town were in Arms at the ſame time, in order to the ſecuring thereof, in caſe of a Neceſſity of Collonel Streaters attending Lamberts Motion; The Collonel purpoſing that Night, if need had been, to have mounted 400 Foot of his Regiment with the Horſes that came into the Town that day (againſt the Fair on Monday following) and to have beaten up Lamberts Quarters.

Col. Ingoldsby and Collonel Streater march againſt Lambert.

On Eaſter Day early, Intelligence was brought to Collonel Ingoldsby and Collonel Streater, That Lambert was at Daventry; upon which they marched towards him: When they came to Daventry, they heard Lambert was march'd two miles from thence, and therefore haſtned to meet him; which they did in a plain Field, where a little Brook parted them; Lambert had with him, beſides the Troops of Horſe before-mentioned, theſe Perſons, viz. Collonel Okey, Collonel Axtel, Collonel Cobbet, Lieutenant-Collonel Young, Major Creed, Captain Timothy Clare, Captain Gregory, Captain Spinage, beſides divers private Souldiers, who were Anabaptiſts.

The two Parties fac'd one the other near four hours; during which time, Collonel Ingoldsby, and Collonel Streater ſpent their time, partly in their vigilant obſervation of the Intention of the Enemy, and partly in Encouraging of the Horſe and Foot under their Command, whereby they begot a more than ordinary Reſolution in both Horſe and Foot: In the mean time, Lambert ſent out ſeveral Scouts towards them; but Ingoldsby would not permit any of his to leave their Ranks, only he himſelf riding up towards them, had many Diſcourſes with them: Ingoldsby was not known to the Scouts, but appearing to them as a private Souldier, dealt ſo effectually with them, by laying open the danger of their Action, that 25 Troopers, with a Quarter-Maſter, came over to him. The Collonel diſmounted and diſarm'd them for the preſent, becauſe they were unwilling to engage in his party but afterwards reſtored their Horſes and Arms to them.

Lamberts delay in Engaging being obſerved by Col. Streater, he Adviſed, That both Horſe and Foot ſhould immediately advance, and put the Buſineſs to an Iſſue, out of the Confidence he had of the Foot eſpecially: And withal deſired Col. Ingoldsby, That if he ſhould be Routed, he would Rally with what ſpeed he could; For that he ſhould be Confident to find the Foot to maintain their Ground. Collonel Streater's Foot being about Five Hundred; two Compleat Companies, the reſt Commanded Men out of ſeveral Companies, moſt Pikes, which in that Champion-ground would ſerve well to ſecure the Body againſt the Horſe.

Defeats his Party, & takes him Priſoner.

When the two Bodies came near, juſt as Col. Ingoldsby was going to Charge, Collonel Streater Commanded ſix Files of Muſqueteers to advance, one File gave fire, and hurt one or two of Lamberts Horſe; his Drums beat, and in good Order he advanced, having given ſtrict Command that his Muſqueteers ſhould not fire till they came as near as Puſh of Pike. But Lamberts men held the Noſes of their Piſtols towards the ground, and Nelthrops Troop came off to Ingoldsby; Haſleriggs Troop having deſerted him before; for Collonel Ingoldsby ſending Captain Elſmore before him with a party, as he march'd to find Lambert, met Captain Haſlerigg, and took him priſoner, but releas'd him upon his Parole, to ſend his whole Troop over to joyn with Ingoldsby, which he faithfully perform'd, ſending it to them by his Quarter-Maſter, but he retir'd himſelf: Collonel Ingoldsby told Lambert, He was his Priſonner: Whereupon Creed and the reſt earneſtly intreated him, to do what he pleaſed with them, but to permit Lambert to eſcape; acquainting him, That his Life could be of no advantage to him; Which Ingoldsby abſolutely refuſed, telling them, He would not be treacherous to thoſe that had commanded him by ſuch an ungenerous Act: Lambert then turned about his Horſe, and attempted to eſcape, but Ingoldsby purſued him ſo cloſe, that he came quickly up to him, and vow'd to piſtol him, if he did not immediately yield. Lambert, in great depreſſion of ſpirit, twice pray'd him to let him eſcape; but when he ſaw he could not prevail, ſubmitted, as all the reſt did, except Okey, Axtel, and Cleer, who eſcaped.

Gen. Mountague acquaints the Council of State with the condition of the Fleet.

General Mountague, who had been ſome time before by the Generals advice, made one of the Generals at Sea, (General Monk being himſelf the other) and ſent to take charge of the Fleet, ſent an Accompt to the Council of State, of the Condition of it, how that Vice-Admiral Lawſon, and with him the whole Navy, had receiv'd him with great ſatisfaction, and were all fix'd in obedience to their Authority, with Reſolutions to ſubmit to the Determination of the next Parliament.

The Appearance of the City Militia in Hide-Park.

The Tueſday after this Defeat of Lambert, all the Militia of the City of London drew into Hide-Park; there were Six Trained-Band Regiments, the Red, the White, the Green, the Blew, the Yellow, and the Orange, beſides ſeveral Regiments of Auxiliaries: The Red was commanded by Collonel Bateman Alderman, the White by Collonel Wale Alderman, the Green by Collonel John Robinſon Alderman, the Blew by Collonel William Vincent, the Yellow by Collonel William Bromfield, and the Orange by Collonel Thomas Bloodworth, all men of courage and good Affections, to the Peace and Felicity of their Native Country. They made up in all twelve Thouſand Men: The General, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and a great concourſe of Noble-men and Gentlemen, were preſent at the Appearance. And that Evening, Collonel Lambert, Collonel Cobbet, and Major Creed, were brought Priſoners to the Council of State, and committed to the Tower. And the next day the reſt of the Priſoners were brought by Captain Parry to the General, and by him committed to the Marſhal-General.

Col. Lambert, Col. Cobbet, & others, ſent priſoners to the Tower.

The Defeat of Lambert did not make the Phanatiques leave the purſuit of their Miſchiefs, ſeveral Seditious Pamplets being publiſhed in Print, to deprave the Minds of the People, and Tickets were thrown into the Courts of Guard in the Night to debauch the Souldiers. But none of them appear'd to have been penn'd with more virulency and malice, than that vile ſuppoſititious Paper which they ſcatter'd about, carrying in its Frontice-piece, A Letter from Bruxels, &c. with which ſome of his Majeſties moſt implacable Enemies, attempted to poyſon, or palliade the now high Expectations, and Impreſſions

1660. of his good Subjects: And it was in truth ſo fatally tim'd, and ſo ſubtilly contriv'd, that it had like to have done a great deal of Miſchief amongſt ſome, who not acquainted with the innate, and unparallel'd Inclination of his Majeſty to Clemency, began to apprehend their forwardneſs for his Reſtauration, and to remit of their former Zeal: But this Hydra was dextrouſly cut off by Mr. Evelyn, whom we formerly mention'd, in a Reply which was Printed, to the intire ſatisfaction of all that read it. I take pleaſure to mention the Particular, becauſe upon another occaſion, long before, he publiſh'd, with no ſmall hazard of his Life and Liberty, that his Apology to the Royal Party, in anſwer to that Remonſtrance, Entituled the Plea of the Army, (contriv'd and ſet forth by that Phanatick Power, immediatly upon their Dethroning of Richard) as being it ſeems no longer able to ſupport the common, but unjuſt Reproaches of his Majeſties Cauſe, by Arguments deriv'd from their ill Conduct, and Fatal Succeſs of divers of his ſuffering Party; and becauſe I take it to be the boldeſt Piece (not excepting even the famous Killing no Murther; written, as we ſince learn, by Captain Titus) that ever durſt ſee the Light in that raging Period; and for that it was no leſs than thrice re-printed (an Honour which the Pamphlets of that Age did ſeldom arrive to) and obſerv'd to have won more Proſelytes to the King, and kept up the fervour of his then almoſt expiring Party, than any thing of that nature had done before it: which, was a Service the greateſt that Conjuncture was capable of, and none of the leaſt to his Majeſties Advantage all along; as thoſe who ſhall pleaſe to call to mind the Effects of thoſe Paper-Weapons, muſt needs acknowledge, by warming and inſpiriting the Hearts of a Languiſhing and almoſt deſponding People, in danger of being poyſon'd by the perpetual Venome of his Majeſties Adverſaries, whoſe Pens as well as Swords, were daily ſharpen'd againſt him, but for ſuch ſeaſonable Antidotes, as upon all occaſions encountered their Libels, and inſidiary Diſcourſes; amongſt which there were alſo ſeveral Letters ſent to the General from unknown Hands, to ſubvert his Allegiance likewiſe; and to Clarges it was written, That notwithſtanding his Practices, to introduce the King and his Family, all his Endeavours were blaſted by Morrice, who had aſcribed to himſelf alone the Reputation of that Service, and diſperſed to all the Royal Party, that he had no Credit with the General, and therefore to him only Application ſhould be made, as to one in whom the General repoſed his greateſt Truſt. But theſe and all other Artifices were too poor to ſubvert the Loyalty of one, who valued not to whom the good of his Services was attributed, if the Effects he deſired were produced by them: But nevertheleſs, theſe Practices, to divide the Generals Friends, made the Council of State, the General, and all his Officers, more watchful for the Publique Peace, and more diligent in their Duties: The Officers began more and more to be convinced of their former Errours, by ſeveral publique and private Diſcourſes of the Clemency and other Royal Indowments of his Majeſty: That which they moſt apprehended, was from Rumours which had been diſperſed amongſt them, of the implacability of all thoſe of his Party, of whom it was ſaid, If they had Power they would ſhew themſelves full of Rancour and Revenge againſt all that were ingaged in the late War againſt them: and obſerving that moſt of the Members of Parliament were ſuch, notwithſtanding all the Qualifications for their Elections, many ſtrange Doubts poſſeſſed them; and amongſt other Effects of their Diſeaſed Imaginations, they fancied, the Parliament (when met) would rather hinder, than promote his Majeſties Goodneſs and Mercy towards them: But whileſt they were in the midſt of theſe various Inquietudes, the Royal Party, in all the Counties of England, publiſhed ſeveral excellent Declarations, which fully ſatisfied and appeaſed their Minds, wherein they Declared, That they reſolved to adhere to the largeſt Aſſurances of amicable Agreement with all Perſons, and that they would never put any Difference betwixt ſuch as ſhould now unite with them, and thoſe who firſt engaged in the ſame Perſwaſion with themſelves. Of all which, we ſhall only herein publiſh one, they being all to the ſame purpoſe: It was Intituled,

A Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry, that adhered to the late King in and about the City of London; which was expreſſed in theſe words:

The Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry about London.

After the Miſeries of a Civil War, and the many and fruitleſs Attempts towards Settlement, upon ſeveral Intereſts, and imaginary Forms of Government, It having pleaſed Almighty God, by unexpected and wonderful meanes, to give theſe Nations a probable hope of being reſtored to thoſe Laws and Priviledges, which have been tranſmitted to them from their Anceſtors; We do Declare, That we think our ſelves obliged, next to Divine Providence, to attribute this Gracious Work to his Excellency the Lord General Monck, who, as he had the Courage to aſſert the Publick Liberty, and the Prudence to carry it on againſt ſo many Difficulties, has alſo had the Happineſs, to lead Us thus far through the Wilderneſs of Confuſion, without paſſing the Red-Sea of Blood; And becauſe the Enemies of the Publique Peace, have endeavoured to repreſent thoſe of the Kings Party, as men implacable, and ſuch as would ſacrifice the Common Good to their own private Paſſions; We do ſincerely profeſs, That we do reflect upon our paſt ſufferings from the Hands of God, and therefore do not cheriſh any violent Thoughts or Inclinations, to have been any way Inſtrumental in them; And if the Indiſcretion of any ſpirited Perſons, tranſports them to Expreſſions contrary to this our ſence, we utterly diſclaim them. And deſire, that the Imputation may extend no further, than the Folly of the Offenders. And we further Declare, That we intend by our quiet and peaceable Behaviour, to teſtifie our ſubmiſſion to the preſent Power, as it now reſides in the Council of State, in expectation of the future Parliament; upon whoſe Wiſdom and Determinations, we truſt God will give ſuch a Bleſſing, as may produce a perfect Settlement, both in Church and State.

And

'And as his Excellency hath not choſen the 'Sandy Foundations of Self-government, but the 'firm Rock of National Intereſt, whereon to 'frame a Settlement; It is our Hope and Prayer 'That when the Building comes to be raiſed, it 'may not like Rome, have the beginning in the 'Blood of Brethren, nor like Babel, be inter-'rupted by the Confuſion of Tongues: but that 'we may all ſpeak one Language, and be of 'one Name; That all mention of Parties and 'Factions, and all Rancour and Animoſities may 'be thrown in, and buryed like Rubbiſh under 'the Foundation.

Sir Arthur Haſlerigg was by the General ſuſpected to have contributed towards the Inſurrection of Lambert; but upon notice thereof, he came to him, and gave him evident proofs to the contrary, and promiſed to live peaceably at home; having before quietly ſubmitted his Regiments of Horſe and Foot to the General's diſpoſe, together with the Garriſons of Berwick, New-Caſtle, Carliſle, and Tinmouth.

1660. CHARLES R.

His Majesties Letter to the House of Lords.

RIght Trusty and Right Welbeloved Cousins, and Right Trusty and Welbeloved Cousins, and Trusty and Right Welbeloved; We Greet you well. We cannot have a better reason to promise Our Self an end of Our Common Sufferings and Calamities, and that Our Own Just Power and Authority will with Gods Blessing be restored to Us, Than that We hear You are again acknowledged to have that Authority and Jurisdiction which hath alwayes belonged to you by your Birth, and the Fundamental Laws of the Land: And We have thought it very fit and safe for Us to call to you for your help in the Composing the Confounding Distempers and Distractions of the Kingdom, in which your Sufferings are next to those We have undergone Our Self; And therefore you cannot but be the most proper Councellors for removing those Mischiefs, and for preventing the like for the future. How great a Trust We repose in you, for the procuring and establishing a blessed Peace and Security for the Kingdom, will appear to you by Our inclosed Declaration; Which Trust, We are most confident you will discharge with what Justice and Wisdom that becomes you, and must alwayes be expected from you; and that upon your experience, how one violation succeeds another, when the known Relations and Rules of Justice are once transgressed, you will be as Jealous for the Rights of the Crown, and for the Honour of your King, as for your selves: And then you cannot but discharge your Trust with good success, and provide for, and establish the Peace, Happiness and Honour of King, Lords, and Commons, upon that Foundation which can only support it, and We shall be all happy in each other: And as the whole Kingdom will bless God for you all, so We shall hold Our Self obliged in an especial manner to Thank you in particular, according to the affection you shall express towards Us. We need the less inlarge to you upon this Subject, because We have likewise writ to the House of Commons, Which We suppose they will Communicate to you: And We pray God to bless your Joynt Endeavours for the good of Us all. And so We bid you very heartily farewel.

Given at Our Court at Breda, this 14 day of April, 1660. In the Twelfth Year of Our Reign.

The Declaration was next read, which was Intituled,

His Majestie's gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects.

CHARLES R.

His Majesties Declaration.

'CHARLES by the Grace of God, King 'of England, Scotland, France, and Ire- 'land, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all Our 'Loving Subjects of what Degree or Quality 'soever, Greeting. If the general Distraction and 'Confusion which is spread over the whole 'Kingdom, doth not awaken all men to a desire 'and longing, that those Wounds which have so 'many Years together been kept bleeding, may 'be bound up, all We can say will be to no pur-'pose: However, after this long silence, We 'have thought it Our Duty to declare how much 'We desire to contribute thereunto: And that as 'We can never give over the hope in good time 'to obtain the Possession of that Right which 'God and Nature hath made Our due; So We 'do make it Our daily Suit to the Divine Provi- 'dence, that he will, in Compassion to Us and 'Our Subjects, after so long Misery and Suffe-'rings, remit, and put Us into a quiet and pea-'ceable possession of that Our Right, with as little 'Blood and Damage to Our People as is possi-'ble: Nor do We desire more to enjoy what is 'Ours, then that all Our Subjects may enjoy what 'by Law is theirs, by a full and intire admini-'stration of Justice throughout the Land, and by 'extending Our Mercy where it is wanted and 'deserv'd.

'And to the end that the fear of Punishment 'may not engage any Conscious to themselves of 'what is past, to a perseverance in Guilt for the 'future, by opposing the Quiet and Happiness of 'their Country in the Restoration both of King, 'Peers, and People, to their Just, Antient, and 'Fundamental Rights. We do by these Presents 'Declare, That We do grant a Free and General 'Pardon, which We are ready, upon Demand, 'to passe under Our Great Seal of England, to all 'Our Subjects of what Degree or Quality soever, 'who within Forty dayes after the publishing 'hereof, shall lay hold upon this Our Grace and 'Favour, and shall by any publique Act declare 'their doing so, and that they return to the Loy-'alty and Obedience of good Subjects; Excepting 'only such Persons as shall hereafter be excepted 'by Parliament: Those only excepted, Let all Our 'Subjects, how faulty soever, rely upon the 'Word of a King, solemnly given by this pre-'sent Declaration, That no Crime whatsoever 'Committed against us, or Our Royal Father, 'before the Publication of this, shall ever rise in 'Judgment, or be brought in Question, against 'any of them, to the least Endamagement of 'them either in their Lives, Liberties, or Estates, 'or (as far forth as lies in Our Power) so much 'as to the prejudice of their Reputations, by any 'reproach, or term of distinction from the rest of 'any of Our best Subjects; We Desiring and Or-'daining, That henceforth all Notes of Discord, 'Separation, and Difference of Parties, be utterly 'abolished among all Our Subjects, whom We 'Invite and Conjure to a perfect Union among 'themselves, under Our Protection, for the re-'settlement of Our Just Rights and Theirs, in a 'Free Parliament, by which upon the Word 'of a King We will be advised.

'And because the Passion and uncharitableness 'of the Times have produced several Opinions in 'Religion, by which men are engaged in Parties 'and Animosities against each other, which, when 'they shall hereafter unite in a freedom of Con-'versation, will be Composed, or better under-'stood; We do declare a Liberty to tender Con-'sciences, And that no man shall be disquieted or 'called in question for differences of Opinion in 'matters of Religion, which do not disturb the 'Peace of the Kingdom, and that We shall be 'ready to consent to such an Act of Parliament, 'as upon mature deliberation shall be offered to 'us, for the full granting that Indulgence.

And

'And because in the continued distractions of 'so many Years, and so many and great Revo- 'lutions, many Grants and Purchases of Estates 'have been made to and by many Officers, Soul- 'diers, and others, who are now possessed of 'the same, and who may be liable to Actions at 'Law, upon several Titles; We are likewise 'willing that all such differences, and all things 'relating to the said Grants, Sales, and Purchases, 'shall be determined in Parliament, which can 'best provide for the Just satisfaction of all men 'who are concerned.

'And we do further declare, that we will be 'ready to consent to any Act or Acts of Parlia- 'ment to the purposes aforesaid, And for the full 'satisfaction of all Arrears due to the Officers and 'Souldiers of the Army, under the Command 'of General Monck, and that they shall be recei- 'ved into our Service upon as good pay and Con- 'ditions as they now enjoy.

Given under our Sign Manual and Privy Signet at our Court at Breda this 14 day of April, 1660. in the twelfth Year of our Reign.

After the Reading of these, the Lords Order- ed Thanks to be given to Sir John Greenvil, for bringing that Gracious Declaration and Letter, and Resolv'd by Vote, That they do own and de- clare, That according to the Ancient and Funda- mental Laws of this Kingdom, the Government is, and ought to be, by King, Lords, and Com- mons.

The Vote of the House of Lords upon the reading of the Kings Let- ter and Decla- ration.

Sir John Greenvil came then to the House of Commons, who were before his Coming ac- quainted with the Letter he delivered to the Council; upon Notice of his being at the Door, he was admitted, and presented a Letter to them from his Majestie. The Letter had in it a Dupli- cate of the same Declaration which was inclosed in the Letter to the Lords: The Letter and it were both read, and the Letter was Superscri- bed;

To Our Trusty and Welbeloved, the Speaker of the House of Commons.

CHARLES R.

His Majesties Letter to the House of Commons.

TRusty and Welbeloved, We Greet you well. 'In these great and insupportable 'Afflictions and Calamities under which the poor 'Nation hath been so long exercised, and by which 'it is so near exhausted, we cannot think of a 'more natural and proper Remedy, than to re- 'sort to those for Counsel and Advice, who have 'seen and observed the first beginning of our Mi- 'series, the Progress from bad to worse, and the 'mistakes and mis-understandings which have 'produced and contributed to Inconveniences 'which were not intended; and after so many Re- 'volutions, and the observation of what hath 'attended them, are now trusted by our good 'Subjects to repair the Breaches which are made, 'and to provide proper Remedies for these Evils, 'and for the lasting Peace, Happiness and Secu- 'rity of the Kingdom.

'We do assure you upon our Royal Word, 'That none of our Predecessors have had a grea- 'ter Esteem of Parliaments, than we have in our 'Judgement, as well as from Our Obligation; 'We do believe them to be so vital a part of the 'Constitution of the Kingdom, and so necessary 'for the Government of it, that We well know 'neither Prince nor People can be in any tolerable 'degree happy without them: And therefore you 'may be confident, That We shall always look 'upon their Counsels as the best we can receive, 'and shall be as tender of their Priviledges, and 'as Careful to preserve and protect them, as of 'that which is most near to Our Self, and most 'necessary for Our Own Preservation. 1660.

'And as this is Our Opinion of Parliaments, 'That their Authority is most necessary for the 'Government of the Kingdom; So We are most 'Confident, that You believe and find, that the 'preservation of the Kings Authority is as neces- 'sary for the preservation of Parliaments; and 'that it is not the Name but the right Constitu- 'tion of them, which can prepare and apply pro- 'per Remedies for those Evils which are grievous 'to the People, and which can thereby establish 'their Peace and Security. And therefore We 'have not the least doubt, but that you will be 'as Tender in, and as Jealous of, any thing that 'may infringe Our Honour, or impair Our Au- 'thority, as of your own Liberty and Proper- 'ty; which is best preserv'd by preserving the o- 'ther.

'How far We have trusted You in this great 'Affair, and how much it is in your Power to 'restore the Nation to all that it hath lost, and 'to redeem it from any Infamy it hath undergone, 'and to make King and People as happy as they 'ought to be; You will find by Our inclosed 'Declaration, a Copy of which We have like- 'wise sent to the House of Peers; and you will 'easily believe that We would not voluntarily, 'and of Our Self have reposed so great a Trust in 'you, but upon an intire Confidence that you 'will not abuse it, and that you will proceed in 'such a manner, and with such due consideration 'of us who have trusted you, that We shall not 'be ashamed of declining other Assistance (which 'We have assurance of) and repairing to you for 'more natural and proper Remedies for the Evils 'We would be freed from, nor sorry that We 'have bound up Our Own Interest so intirely 'with that of Our Subjects, as that We refer it 'to the same Persons to take care of Us, who are 'trusted to provide for them.

'We look upon You as wise and dispassionate 'Men, and good Patriots, who will raise up 'those Banks and Fences which have been cast 'down, and who will most reasonably hope, that 'the same Prosperity will again spring from those 'Roots from which it hath heretofore and al- 'ways grown; Nor can We apprehend that you 'will propose any thing to Us, or expect any 'thing from Us, but that We are as ready to 'give, as you to receive.

'If you desire the advancement and Propaga- 'tion of the Protestant Religion, We have, by 'Our constant Profession and Practice of it, gi- 'ven sufficient Testimony to the World, that 'neither the unkindness of those of the same Faith 'towards Us, nor the Civilities and Obligations 'from those of a contrary Profession, (of both 'which We have had abundant Evidence) could

'in the leaſt degree ſtartle Us, or make Us Swerve 'from our zeal and affection for it, to which 'We will not readily conſent. And we hope in 'due time Our Self to propoſe ſomething to you 'for the Propagation of it, that will ſatisfie the 'World, that We have alwayes made it both 'Our Care and Our Study, and have enough 'Obſerved what is moſt like to bring diſadvan-'tage to it.

'If you deſire ſecurity for theſe, who in theſe 'Calamitous times either wilfully or weakly 'have tranſgreſſed thoſe bounds which were pre-'ſcribed, and have invaded each others Rights, 'We have left to you to provide for their Securi-'ty and Indempnity, and in ſuch a way as you 'ſhall think Juſt and Reaſonable; And by a 'Juſt Computation of what men have done, 'and ſuffered, as near as is poſſible, to take care 'that all men be ſatisfied, which is the ſureſt 'way to ſuppreſſe and extirpate all ſuch uncharі-'tableneſs and animoſity, as might hereafter 'ſhake and threaten that Peace which for the 'preſent might ſeem Eſtabliſhed.

'If there be a crying Sinne for which the Na-'tion may be involv'd in the infamy that attends 'it, We cannot doubt but that you will be as 'ſolicitious to Redeem and Vindicate the Nation 'from the Guilt and Infamy, as We can be.

'If you deſire that Reverence and obedience 'may be paid to the fundamental Laws of the 'Land, and that Juſtice may be equally and 'impartially adminiſtred to all men, it is that 'which We deſire to be ſworn to Our Self, 'and that all Perſons in Power and Authority 'ſhould be ſo too.

'In a word, there is nothing which you can 'propoſe, that may make the Kingdom happy, 'which we will not contend with you to com-'paſs; and upon this Confidence and Aſſurance, 'We have thought fit to ſend you this Declara-'tion, that you may, as much as is poſſible, at 'this diſtance, ſee Our heart, which when God 'ſhall bring Us nearer together (as we hope he 'will do ſhortly) will appear to you very agree-'able to what we have profeſſed; and We hope, 'that We have made that right Chriſtian Uſe 'of Our Affliction, and that the Obſervation 'and experience We have had in other Coun-'tries, hath been ſuch, as that We, and We 'hope all Our Subjects, ſhall be the better for 'what We have ſeen and ſuffered.

'VVe ſhall add no more, but our Prayers to 'Almighty God, that He will ſo bleſs your 'Counſels, and direct your endeavours, that his 'Glory and Worſhip may be provided for, and 'the Peace, Honour, and Happineſs of the Na-'tion, may be eſtabliſhed upon thoſe founda-'tions which can beſt ſupport it. And ſo we bid 'you farewel.

After the reading of this Letter and the Declaration, his Excellency the Lord General deſired the Letter that was directed to him, to be Communicated to the Council and the Army, might alſo be read, which was agreed. In that Letter there was alſo the former Declaration incloſed, and the Addreſs of the Letter was:

To our Truſty and Welbeloved General Monck, to be by him Communicated to the Preſident and Council of State, and to the Officers of the Armies under his Command.

CHARLES R.

His Majeſties Letter to the General, to be communicated to the Officers of the Army, and Council of State.

'TRuſty and Welbeloved, VVe greet you 'well: It cannot be believ'd, but that We 'have been, are, and ever muſt be, as ſolicious as 'VVe can, by all endeavours to improve the af-'fections of Our good Subjects at home, and to 'procure the aſſiſtance of Our Friends and Allies 'abroad, for the recovery of that right, which 'by the Laws of God and Man is unqueſtionable, 'and of which VVe have been ſo long diſpoſeſ-'ſed by ſuch force, and with thoſe Circumſtan-'ces, as VVe do not deſire to aggravate by any 'ſharp expreſſions, but rather wiſh, that the me-'mory of what is paſſed, may be buried to the 'VVorld. That VVe have more endeavoured to 'prepare, and to improve the Affections of Our 'Subjects at home, for Our Reſtauration, than 'to procure Aſſiſtance from abroad, to in-'vade either of Our Kingdoms, is as manifeſt to 'the VVorld: And VVe cannot give a better Evi-'dence, that VVe are ſtill of the ſame minde, 'than in this Conjuncture when common reaſon 'muſt ſatisfie all men, that VVe cannot be with-'out Aſſiſtance from abroad, VVe chooſe rather 'to ſend to you, who have it in your own power 'to prevent that ruine and deſolation which a 'VVarre would bring upon the Nation and to 'make the whole Kingdom owe the Peace, Hap-'pineſs, Security, and Glory it ſhall enjoy to 'your Vertue; and to acknowledge that your 'Armies have complyed with their Obligations 'for which they were firſt raiſed, for the preſer-'vation of the Proteſtant Religion, the Honour 'and Diguity of the King, the Priviledges of 'Parliament, the Liberty and Property of the 'Subject, and the fundamental Laws of the Land; 'and that you have vindicated that Truſt, which 'others moſt perfidiouſly abuſed and betrayed.

'How much VVe deſire and Reſolve, to con-'tribute to thoſe good ends, will appear to you 'by Our encloſed Declaration, which VVe deſire 'you to cauſe to be publiſhed for the Informa-'tion and Satisfaction of all good Subjects, who 'do not deſire a further effuſion of precious Chri-'ſtian Blood, but to have their Peace and Securi-'ty founded upon that which can only ſupport 'it; an Unity of Affections amongſt Our ſelves, 'an equal adminiſtration of Juſtice to men, reſto-'ring Parliaments to a full Capacity of providing 'for all that is amiſs, and the Laws of the Land 'to their due veneration.

'You have been your ſelves witneſſes of ſo 'many Revolutions, and have had ſo much 'experience, how far any Power and Authority 'that is only aſſum'd by Paſſion and Appetite, 'and not ſupported by Juſtice, is from providing 'for the happineſs and peace of the People, or 'from receiving any obedience from them, with-'out which no Government can provide for 'them; and that you may very reaſonably be-'lieve that God hath not been ſo well pleaſed 'with the attempts that have been made, ſince he 'hath uſually increaſed the confuſion, by giving 'all the ſucceſs that hath been deſired, and brought

'brought that to paſſe without effect, which the 'deſigners have propos'd as the beſt means to 'ſettle and Compoſe the Nation: And therefore 'We cannot but hope and believe, that you will 'concur with Us in the Remedy, VVe have ap-'plyed, which to humane underſtanding, is only 'proper for the ills We all groan under; and that 'you will make your ſelves the Bleſſed Inſtru-'ments to bring this Bleſſing of Peace and Re-'conciliation upon King and People; it being the 'uſual method in which Divine Providence de-'lighteth it ſelf, to uſe and ſanctifie thoſe very 'meanes which ill men deſign for the ſatisfaction 'of private and particular ends and ambition, and 'other wicked purpoſes, to wholeſome and publi-'que ends, and to eſtabliſh that good which is 'moſt contrary to the deſigners; which is the 'greateſt manifeſtation of Gods particular kind-'neſs to a Nation that can be given in this world. 'How far we reſolve to preſerve your Intereſts, 'and reward your Services, VVe refer to Our 'Declaration; And we hope God will inſpire you 'to perform your duty to Us, and to your Na-'tive Countrey, whoſe happineſs cannot be ſe-'perated from each other.

'We have intruſted Our Welbeloved Servant 'Sir John Greenvill, one of the Gentlemen of Our 'Bed-chamber, to deliver this unto you, and to 'give Us an accompt of your reception of it, and 'to deſire you, that it may be publiſhed. And ſo 'we bid you farewell.

Given at Our Court at Breda, this 14 of April 1660. In the twelfth Year of Our Reign.

After the reading of theſe Letters, his Excellency deſired their permiſſion to anſwer it, and to Communicate that his Majeſties Declaration to the Officers of the Army; which was readily conſented to.

The Parliament preſent his Majeſty, and his two Brothers, with the ſumme of 65000 l.

And then they took into their Conſideration, That his Majeſty having been deprived of his Revenue, could not but be in want of Monies; and therefore Ordered, That the Summ of fifty Thouſand Pounds ſhould be preſently raiſed and preſented to his Majeſty from that Houſe, and ten Thouſand Pounds to his Royal Higneſs the Duke of York, and five Thouſand Rounds to the Duke of Glouceſter.

The Lords ſent down a Meſſage to the Commons, with the Vote of Recognition formerly mentioned, which was agreed to, and each of the Houſes appointed Committees to draw up their ſeveral Anſwers to his Majeſties Letters, and Reſolv'd, that the Superſcription ſhould be.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

And the Commons Ordered, That all the Journals ſhould be ſearch'd, and thoſe Acts and Orders razed out, which were inconſiſtent with the Government of King, Lords, and Commons; Theſe were the chiefeſt Tranſactions in Parliament that day.

Coll. Lydcot's Speech upon the reading of his Majeſties Letter and Declaration.

In the Evening his Excellency ſummoned all his Officers that were in and near the City, and Communicated to him his Majeſties Letter and Declaration; upon the reading whereof, Collonel Lydcot firſt ſpake; addreſſing himſelf to his Excellency then preſent; He ſaid, They were all bound to bleſs God for the happineſs of that day, which made them Witneſſes of his Majeſties great goodneſs and clemency to all his Subjects expreſſed in that Declaration, and for his particular kindneſs to them manifeſted in his moſt gracious Letter. 1660.

He ſaid, It was moſt true, that they had been Witneſſes of many Revolutions (as it is therein expreſſed) and experienced to their ſorrow the inconveniencies of them; That at the beginning of the Wars, the ſafety of the Kings Perſon, Proteſtant Religion, Priviledges of Parliament, and Liberty of the Subjects, were Principles that many good men with them thought they might ſafely engage for; but by degrees after they came into Blood, ſome implacable Spirits improved their Succeſſes to make the diviſions irrepatable, and many men were forc'd to continue their Arms, more for their own ſecurity than the Juſtice of them: But that which was his comfort, and ought to be all theirs, was, That they had now by the Prudence of their ever to be honoured Generall, the opportunity to comply with the Obligations for which they were firſt raiſed, and they were theſe whom his Majeſty was pleas'd to own in their ſubmiſſion to his moſt juſt and Lawful Authority, to be the Inſtruments to bring the bleſſing of Peace and Reconciliation upon the King and People.

This Speech was approv'd by all them that heard it; But Collonel Knight deſired they might give ſome written Teſtimony of their acknowledgements of his Majeſties Authority over them, to be preſented to his Excellency the Lord Generall; That ſince his Majeſties Letter was by him communicated to them, he might in his Anſwer to it, return their humble ſence of it.

This motion produc'd a Reference to a Committee of Officers, to draw up an Addreſs to his Excellency, in Complyance with his Majeſties Letter and Declaration, to be prepared againſt ſix of the clock the next morning, and to deſire his Excellencies leave, that they might then meet to give their Conſents, and ſubſcribe their names to it; which his Excellency readily approved. And the next morning, the Addreſſes being prepared, was read to the Council of Officers, and Signed by them, and preſented to his Excellency.

The Title was,

To his Excellency the Lord General Monck, Captain General of all the Armies and Forces in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and one of the Generals at Sea.

The humble Addreſs of the Officers of your Excellencies Army, in the Name of themſelves and their Brethren.

The Officers Addreſs to his Excellency, in Complyance with his Majeſties Letter and Declaration.

'ALthough we cannot doubt of your Excel-'lencies Confidence in our affections, and 'our Faithfulneſs to your Excellency, and that 'Diſcipline which by your good and prudent 'Conduct, hath been exerciſed over us, whereby 'we are inſtructed to an intire Obedience to your 'Excellency, and that Authority which the Lord 'ſhall place over Us, which we hope we have 'manifeſted in our laſt Actions under your Ex-'cellency, againſt all perſons whatſoever, in 'any wayes diſturbing the Peace and Settlement 'of the Nations; although ſome of them have 1660. 'been our Brethren formerly engaged in the ſame 'Cauſe with Us. As alſo in our late Remon- 'ſtrance and Addreſs to your Excellency, where- 'in, as it becomes Us in Duty, we have ſo- 'lemnly declared to acquieſce in what the Lord 'ſhall bring forth from the Conſultations of this 'preſent Parliament.

'Yet in regard your Excellency hath been 'pleaſed to communicate to Us, a Letter and 'Declaration from the Kings Majeſty, full of gra- 'cious Expreſſions; we cannot but acknowledge, 'that the matter of it gives a great meaſure of 'quiet to our minds, and more then ordinary 'expectations of the enjoyment of much tran- 'quility and happineſs under His Majeſties Go- 'vernment.

'The free and general Indempnity offered by 'his Majeſty, with a liberty to tender Con- 'ſciences, ſatisfaction of Arrears, his readineſs 'to conſent to a Confirmation of Sales, and 'other Grants and Purchaſes of Eſtates to all 'Perſons now in poſſeſſion of the ſame, is that of 'we which cannot doubt of the reall performance, 'being left by His Majeſty to the Parliaments 'determination, ſo we believe it is the moſt pro- 'bable way to bring the Nations to their deſired 'Settlement. And we hope to evince to his Ma- 'jeſty, and all the world, That we, and all 'thoſe that have been Engaged in the Parlia- 'ments Cauſe, are his Majeſties moſt Loyal 'Subjects, and that your Excellency, and the 'Armies under your Command, have Complyed 'with the Obligations, for which they were firſt 'raiſed, for the preſervation of the true Pro- 'teſtant Religion, the Honour and Dignity of 'the King, the Priviledges of Parliament, the 'Liberty and Proſperity of the Subject, and the 'Fundamental Laws of the Land.

It is read by the Commons, and approved.

In the morning, at the firſt ſitting of the Com- mons-Houſe, the General acquainted them, that he had Communicated his Majeſties Letter, and the Declaration in it encloſed, to the Officers of the Army; and that thereupon they had pre- ſented an Addreſs to him, which he deſired they would be pleaſed to read, which was ordered, and after the reading, it was well approved of.

Commiſſary Clarges appointed by the General, to wait upon his Majeſty with this Addreſs.

His Excellency then told them, He intended to prepare a Letter, to be ſent to his Majeſty, and did with their leave, purpoſe to ſend that Addreſs to him, That his Majeſty might thereby perceive, the Armies were at his devotion; and deſigning to ſend it by Commiſſary Clarges, who was as well a Member of their Houſe, as an Officer of the Army, he requeſted their permiſſion for him to go.

The Houſe then Ordered, he ſhould have leave to go from his Excellency to the King; and they gave five hundred Pounds to Sir John Greenville, to buy him a Jewel, as a Teſtimony of the Reſpects of the Houſe to him.

After this, Alderman Robinſon inform'd them, That the ſaid Sir John Greenville, with the Lord Mordant, had preſented a Letter from his Majeſty, to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, and they Commanded him to ask their leave to return an Anſwer to it. Which after the reading it in the Houſe, was granted; In that Letter alſo his Majeſties Declaration was incloſed: The Letter it ſelf was directed,

To Our Truſty and Wel-beloved, the Lord Major, Aldermen, and the Common-Councel of our City of London.

CHARLES R.

His Majeſties Letter to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London.

TRuſty and Well-beloved, We greet you well: In theſe great Revolutions of late, hapned in that Our Kingdom, to the wonder and Amaze- ment of all the World, there is none that We have looked upon with more Comfort, than the ſo fre- quent and publique manifeſtations of their affections to Us in the City of London, which hath exceed- ingly raiſed Our ſpirits, and which no doubt hath proceeded from the ſpirit of God, and his extraor- dinary mercy to the Nation, which hath been en- couraged by you, and your good Example, to aſſert that Government, under which it hath ſo many hundred years enjoyed as great felicity as any Na- tion in Europe, and to diſcountenance the Imagi- nations of thoſe, who would ſubject Our Subjects to a Government they have not yet deviſed; and to ſatisfie the Pride and Ambition of a few ill men, would introduce in the moſt arbitrary and tyranni- cal Power that was ever yet heard of. How long we have all ſuffered under thoſe and the like devi- ces, all the World takes notice, to the no ſmall reproach of the Engliſh Nation, which we hope is now providing for its own Security and Redemp- tion, and will be no longer bewitch'd by thoſe In- ventions; How deſirous we are to contribute to the obtaining the Peace and Happineſs of our Subjects without effuſion of blood; and how far we are from deſiring to recover what belongs to Us by a Warre, if it can be otherwiſe done, will appear to you by the incloſed Declaration, which together with this Our Letter, We have intruſted Our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Couſin, the Lord Viſcount Mor- dant, and Our Truſty and Well-beloved Servant, Sir John Greenville Knight, one of the Gentle- men of our Bed-Chamber, to deliver to you; to the end, that you, and all the reſt of Our good Subjects of that Our City of London (to whom we deſire it ſhould be publiſhed) may know how far we are from the deſire of revenge, or that the Peace, Happineſs, and Security of the Kingdom, ſhould be raiſed upon any other Foundation than the af- fection and hearts of Our Subjects, and their own Conſents. We have not the leaſt doubt of your juſt ſenſe of theſe our Condeſentions, or of your zeal to advance and promote the ſame good end, by diſ- poſing all men to meet Us with the ſame affection and tenderneſs, in reſtoring the Fundamental Laws to that Reverence that is due to them, and upon the preſervation whereof all Our happineſs depends. And you will have no reaſon to doubt of enjoying your full ſhare in that happineſs, and of the improving it by Our particular Affection to you. It is very natural for all men to do all the good they can for their native Countrey, and to advance the Honour of it: And as we have that full affection for the Kingdom in general, ſo we would not be thought to be without ſome extraor- dinary Kindneſs for Our Native City in that par- ticular, which We ſhall manifeſt on all occaſions, not only by renewing their Charter, and con- firming all thoſe Priviledges, which they have re- ceived from Our Predeceſſours, but by adding and granting any new Favours, which my advance the Trade, Wealth, and Honour, of that Our Native City, for which We will be so sollicitous, that We doubt not but that it will in due time receive some Benefit and Advantage in all those respects, even from Our own Observation and Experience abroad. And We are most confident, We shall never be disappointed in Our Expectation, of all possible Service from your Affections; And so We bid you farewel. Given at Our Court at Breda, the 14. Day of April, 1660. in the Twelfth Year of Our Reign.

We must not omit to commemorate the Cities joyful Resentment of this Letter, and the Declaration in it, expressed by the Grateful Duty of the Common-Council; who immediately upon the Reading of them, Ordered Ten Thousand Pounds to be presented to his Majesty, a Thousand pounds to the Duke of York, and a Thousand pounds to the Duke of Glocester; And that Alderman Langham, Alderman Reynaldson, Alderman Brown, Alderman Thompson, Alderman Frederick, Alderman Wale, Alderman Adams, Alderman Bateman, Alderman Robinson, Mr. Recorder Wild, Sir Nicholas Crisp, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Bidolph, Mr. Foord, Mr. Bloodworth, Sir James Bunce, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. William Bateman, should from that City attend his Majesty, with a Presentment of their most Dutiful Acknowledgments, for his Clemency and Goodness towards them. His Excellency took care, that the Address presented to him by the Officers, together with Copies of the Kings Letter and Declaration, should be sent to all the Regiments and Garrisons in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Dunkirk, requiring all to return their Subscriptions to him, and the Names of Dissenters (if any were) But it appeared by the Returns made, that the Army was so well purged by the Remonstrance that went before, that all readily and dutifully comply'd with this.

Diver's Aldermen, and other eminent Citizens, sent from the City to his Majesty.

Six of the House of Lords, and 12 of the Commons, sent to attend upon his Majesty.

The Lords House nominated the Earles of Oxford, Warwick, and Middlesex, and the Lord Viscount Hereford, the Lord Brook, and the Lord Birkley, to attend his Majesty from that House; And the Commons appointed the Lord Fairfax, Lord Bruce, Lord Falkland, Lord Castleton, Lord Herbert of Worcester, Lord Mandeville, Sir Horatio Townesend, Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Sir George Booth, Sir John Holland, Sir Henry Cholmely, and Denzil Hollis Esquire to attend his Majesty from that House; who were Ordered to make the quickest Preparation they could for their Journey, to desire his Majesty to make a speedy Return to his Parliament, to the Exercise of his Kingly Office.

His Majesties Letter and Declaration to the Fleet, by the diligence of General Mountague, had the same success there, as that in the Army, being Gratefully received by all the Commanders and Sea-men.

The Letter it self was in these Word:

CHARLES R.

His Majesties Letter to the Officers of the Fleet.

'TRusty and Well-beloved, VVe greet you well: It is no small Comfort to Us, after so long and great Troubles and Miseries, 'which the whole Nation hath groaned under; 'and after so great Revolutions, which have 'still encreased those Miseries; to hear that the 'Fleet and Ships, which are the VVals of the 'Kingdom, are put under the Command of two 'Persons so well disposed to, and concerned in, 'the Peace and Happiness of the Kingdom, as 'we believe you to be; and that the Officers and 'Sea-men under your Command, are more in-'clined to return to their Duty to us, and put a 'period to these Distempers and Distractions, 'which have so impoverished and dishonoured the 'Nation, than to widen the Breach and to raise 'their Fortunes by Rapine and Violence; VVhich 'gives Us great encouragement and hope, that 'God Almighty will heal the VVounds, by the 'same Plaister that made the Flesh Raw; that he 'will proceed in the same method, in pouring 'his Blessings upon Us, which he was pleased to 'use when he began to afflict Us, and that the 'Manifestation of the good Affection of the 'Fleet and Sea-men towards Us, and the Peace 'of the Nation, may be the Prologue to that 'Peace, which was first interrupted by the Mi-'stake and Misunderstanding of their Predeces-'sors, which would be such a Blessing upon Us 'all, that VVe should not be less delighted with 'the manner, than the matter of it: In this Hope 'and Confidence, VVe have sent the inclosed De-'claration to You, by which you many discern, 'how much VVe are willing to contribute to-'wards the obtaining the General and Publique 'Peace: In which, as no man can be more, or so 'much, concern'd; so no man can be more soli-'citous for it. And VVe do earnestly desire you, 'that you will cause the said Declaration to be 'published, to all the Officers and Sea-men of 'the Fleet; to the end, that they may plainly dis-'cern, how much VVe have put it into their 'Power, to provide for the Peace and Happiness 'of the Nation, who have been always under-'stood by them, to be the best and most proper 'Counsellours for those good Ends: And You 'are likewise further to Declare to them, That we 'have the same Gracious Purpose towards them, 'which VVe have expressed towards the Army 'at Land; and will be as ready to provide for the 'Payment of all Arrears due to them, and for re-'warding them according to their several Merits, 'as VVe have expressed to the other; and VVe 'will always take so particular a Care of them, 'and their Condition, as shall manifest Our Kind-'ness towards them. And so depending upon 'Gods Blessing, for infusing those good Resoluti-'ons into your and their Hearts, which are best 'for Us all, VVe bid you farewel. Given at Our 'Court at Breda, this 14. Day of April, 1660. in 'the Twelfth Year of Our Reign.

Superscribed,

To Our Trusty and VVel-beloved General Monck, and General Mountague, Generals at Sea: To be Communicated to the Fleet.

The General's Instructions to Clarges, when he began his Journey.

Clarges on the Fifth Day of May began his Journey to his Majesty; and at his parting from the General, he gave him no other Instructions, but to give the King all manner of Assurance of his Fidelity to him, and his Resolution to improve all his Opportunities to his Service: desiring him him not to move any thing to his Majesty, either for himself, or him, or any other in his Company; That his Majesty might see that both he, and those so nearly concern'd with him in his Restauration, sought more the Publique Good of their Country, than their own private Honour or Profit: which he did faithfully observe at that time and ever after. And three dayes after the Lords and Commons having agreed upon a Proclamation to that purpose, his Majesty was Proclaimed with great Solemnity, in the Cities of London and Westminster, the Lords and Commons, and the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London being present; the manner was as followeth:

The Lords came out of their House into the Painted-Chamber, where they cotinued till they were placed in Order; the Earl of Manchester first, then the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Oxford, &c. Thus they walked out along with the Heralds before them, through the Court of Requests, and Westminster-Hall, to the Pallace, where they staid before the Hall Gate, whilest Mr. Bish one of the Heralds, and Mr. Ryly that officiated as King at Arms, with a loud Voice, Proclaimed the King in these words:

ALthough it can no way be doubted, but that His Majesties Right and Title to His Crown and Kingdoms, is, and was every way compleated by the Death of His most Royal Father of Glorious Memory, without the Ceremony or Solempnity of a Proclamation: Yet since Proclamations in such Cases have always been used, to the end, that all good Subjects might, upon this occasion, testifie their Duty and Respect; And since the Armed Violence, and other the Calamities of many Years last past, have hitherto deprived Us of any such Opportunity, wherein we might express our Loyalty and Allegeance to His Majesty; We therefore the Lords and Commons now Assembled in Parliament, together with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of the City of London, and other Free-men of this Kingdom now present, do, according to Our Duty and Allegeance, heartily, joyfully, and unanimously, acknowledge and Proclaim, That upon the Decease of Our late Soveraign Lord King Charles, the Emperial Crown of the Realm of England, and of all the Kingdoms, Dominions, and Rights, belonging to the same, did by inherent Birth-Right, and lawful and undoubted Succession, descend and come to his most Excellent Majesty CHARLES the Second, as being Lineally, Justly, and Lawfully next Heir of the Royal Blood of this Realm; And that by the Goodness and Providence of Almighty GOD, He is of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, the most Potent, Mighty, and Undoubted King: And thereunto we most humbly and faithfully do submit, and oblige Our Selves, our Heirs and Posteritie.

The Proclamation being ended, the Lords and Commons took their Coaches, and proceeded in this Order; First, the Head-Bayliff of Westminster, and his Servants, did ride along with White-Staffes to prepare the Way; Then followed a gallant Troop of the Officers of the Army, and other Gentlemen, with Trumpets before them; Then the Life-Guard, commanded by Captain Philip Howard, very well mounted, and richly Cloath'd; after them a Clasis of Trumpets, and three Heralds; Then a Herald between the Serjeant to the Commons, and the Mace of the Council: Next, Ryly King at Arms, in a Rich Coat of the Kings Arms, betwixt Serjeant Norfolk, and Serjeant Middleton; after whom came the Usher of the Black-Rod, and Mr. Bish: These, thus Ushering the Way, the Earl of Manchester followed in his Coach and Six Horses, the Speaker of the House of Commons in his, then his Excellency General Monck in his; after which followed both Houses of Parliament in Coaches, and after them a Troop of Horse; in this manner they came to White-Hall, where they Proclaimed his Majesty a second time; and then proceeded to Temple-Bar, Where the Gates being shut, The King at Arms, with Trumpets before him, knocked, and demanded Entrance; The Lord Mayor appointed some to ask, Who it was that knock'd? The King at Arms Reply'd, That if they would open the Wicked, and let the Lord Mayor come thither, he would to him deliver his Message: The Lord Mayor came then on Horse-back richly habited, in a Crimson-Velvet Grown, to the Gate, and then the Trumpets sounded, and after silence being made, Alderman Bateman, by Order of the Lord Mayor, demanded of the Herald, Who he was, and what was his Message? To which he answer'd, with his Hat on, We are the Heralds at Armes, appointed and commanded by the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, to demand Entrance into the Famous City of London, to Proclaim Charles the Second King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, and we expect your speedy Answer to this Demand. To which, after a little Consultation amongst themselves, Alderman Bateman Answer'd, Their Message was accepted, and the Gates should be immediately opened; which was done accordingly.

The King at Arms entred first, Trumpets sounding before him, and was joyfully received by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, and all the Officers of the City Militia gallantly accourted, both sides of the Streets were lin'd by the Trained-Bands of London; from Temple-Bar to the Old-Exchange, who stood all with their Swords drawn; The City-Troop march'd next to the Life-Guard, then the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, after whom the Heralds, and the rest, as before; When they came to Chancery-Lane End, they proclaim'd his Majesty a third time: And from thence they march'd to Cheap-side, where he was proclaim'd a fourth time; and from thence to the Old-Exchange, where he was again Proclaim'd. The Shouts and Acclamations of the People, at this gallant and orderly Procession, were very great, and their Demonstrations of Joy, at the several Stations, when the Ceremony of Proclaiming was performing, not to be expressed; sometimes they lookt upwards, and then presently cast their Eyes towards the General, as if they intended at one time to pay a Tribute of Thankfulness to Heaven, and his Excellency, who had done an Action so Glorious and Transcendent, that this present Age cannot enough admire, and our Posterity will with difficulty believe; and then again they cry'd out, God Save King Charles the Second; as if they acknowledged that Dayes Joy, as a Recompence ſufficient for all their Preſſures and Grievances; ſo excellent a Tutor is the want of that, which long Fruition makes us imperfectly underſtand.

The Guns from the Tower were all ſhot off, and all the Streets that Evening were fill'd with Bone-fires, and the Air with the Sound of Ringing of Bells; and all ſeem'd too little, to celebrate the content and exultation of the People, at that Dayes Solemnity.

Commiſſary Clarges his Arrival at Breda, where he is graciouſly receiv'd by his Majeſty.

Commiſſary Clarges made ſuch ſpeed in his Journey to his Majeſty, That on Tueſday the 8th of May, in the Morning, which was the Day after the happy making of this Proclamation, he arrived at Bergen-ap-Zome in Holland, half a Dayes Journey from Breda; There the Governour gave him a very Honourable Reception, and accommodated him with his Coach and ſix Horſes to Breda; and a League before he came to the Town, the Lord Gerrard met him with two Coaches and Six Horſes, and accompained him to his Majeſty, who received him with moſt Gracious Expreſſions of Satisfaction, as well that he was the firſt authorized Meſſenger, that came to him with the News of the intire Submiſſion of his Kingdoms and Army to his Obedience: As for his Relation to that moſt Renowned General, from whoſe prudent Conduct and Courage, all that Happineſs was derived to his Majeſty, and his People.

He preſented to his Majeſty, a Letter from the General in Anſwer to his Majeſties, ſent before to him; and in it was incloſed the Addreſs of the Officers of the Army.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

The General's Letter to his Majeſty.

THE Parliament being Sitting at my receipt of your Majeſties gracious Letter to me, I thought my ſelf obliged in Duty to preſent it to the Houſe of Commons, whoſe Sence of it, and of that other your Majeſtie was pleaſed to ſend to them by Sir John Greenvil, I doubt not but your Majeſtie will receive an accompt of by ſome of their own Members; I have alſo Communicated your Majeſties Letter and Declaration to as many of the Chief Officers of the Army as were preſent in or about London, who reſented your Majeſties Clemency and Grace to them with very great Duty and Affection, as your Majeſty may perceive in the incloſed Addreſs, which within few hours after their Convention, they deliver'd to me.

By all which Circumſtances, I hope I may aſſure your Majeſty, That as the Army hath been very Inſtrumental in their Endeavours to further the Settlement, Peace and Proſperity of your Majeſties Kingdoms and Dominions; So nothing will be dearer to them and me, than to be found in our Generations purſuing thoſe good Ends, which may render us ſerviceable and acceptable to our Country, to give unto Cæſar the things that are Cæſars, and to God the things which are Gods.

May the 5th.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie;

Your Majeſties moſt humble and Obedient Servant and Subject,

George Monck.

This Letter was dictated by his Excellencie in the preſence of many Officers of the Army; but he writ another ſhort Letter with his own hand: Wherein he acquainted his Majeſtie, That he choſe to ſend Mr. Clarges to him, becauſe he was the only Perſon he truſted in the neareſt Concernments and Conſultations for his Reſtauration, as one to whom he deſired his Majeſtie to give Credit to what he ſhould ſay on that behalf.

Clarges Knighted by his Majeſtie, preſents himſelf to the two Dukes, the Princeſs Royal, and others of the moſt Eminent of the Court.

After the reading of theſe Letters, and the Addreſs incloſed in the former of them, His Majeſtie Knighted him, and by many kind expreſſions demonſtrated his ſence of his Merit and Service to him; and after he had been about an hour with his Majeſtie, he had his permiſſion to attend his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, and the Duke of Glouceſter, who received him with that affability which was inherent in them, the moſt accompliſhed and moſt Generous Ptinces in the World. From them he waited on the Princeſs of Orange, who expreſſed great Content at his Relation of the News he brought; and at his parting from her, ſhe gave order he ſhould with his whole Retinue be entertained at her Charge whileſt he ſtaid in Breda, and have a Coach and Six Horſes of her Highneſſes, with Equipage ſuitable, to wait on him when he ſhould give order for it. He went then to Viſit the Lord Chancellor, and from him the Marqueſs of Ormond, as thoſe deſervedly (next the Royal Family) in greateſt Credit with his Majeſtie; both of them receiving him with that reſpect as the import and relation of his Meſſage and Perſon did deſerve.

The Two Houſes of Parliament having perfected the Inſtructions for their Commiſſioners, and the Letter to his Majeſtie, they were delivered to them, and they began their Journey towards the Hague (at which place his Majeſtie intended to meet them) on the 11th of May, the time prefix'd in the Inſtructions for their Journey.

Inſtructions for Aubry Earl of Oxford, Charles Earl of Warwick, Lionel Earl of Middleſex, Lyceſter Viſcount Hereford, George Lord Berkley, Robert Lord Brook, The Lord Herbert, the Lord Mandivel, the Lord Bruce, the Lord Caſtletowne, the Lord Falkland, the Lord Fairfax, Denzel Holles Eſquire, Sir Horatio Townſend, Sir John Holland, Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, Sir George Booth, Sir Henry Cholmley.

The Inſtructions were thus, (Viz.)

The Parliaments Inſtructions to their Commiſſioners, who were ſent to wait upon his Majeſtie.

'YOu are to begin your Journey towards his Majeſtie on Friday next, and make a ſpeedy repair to ſuch place where his Majeſty ſhall be, and humbly to preſent the Letters wherewith you are reſpectively intruſted by both Houſes of Parliament.

'You are to acquaint his Majeſtie with what great Joy and Acclamation he was Proclaimed in and about the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, upon the Eighth day of May Inſtant, and preſent the Proclamation it ſelf to his Majeſtie, and to acquaint him with the Orders of both Houſes to have the ſame Proclaimed throughout the Kingdoms of England and Ireland, and the Dominion of Wales, and the Town of Berwick upon Tweed.

'And

'And that both Houſes have Ordered,

'That all and every the Miniſters throughout 'the Kingdoms of England and Ireland be en- 'joyned in their Publique Prayers to pray for his 'Moſt Excellent Majeſty, and for the moſt Illu- 'ſtrious Prince James Duke of York, and the reſt 'of the Royal Progeny. And alſo have Ordered, 'That the aſſumed Arms of the late pretended 'Common-wealth, where ever they are ſtand- 'ing, be taken down, and that his Majeſties 'Arms be ſet up inſtead thereof: And you are to 'Communicate to his Majeſty the Reſolution of 'both Houſes relating to theſe Inſtructions.

'You are to acquaint his Majeſty with the 'earneſt Deſire of both Houſes, that his Majeſty 'will be pleaſed to make a ſpeedy Return to his 'Parliament, and to the Exerciſe of his Kingly 'Office; and that in order thereunto, both Houſes 'have given Direction to General Mountague one 'of the Generals at Sea, and other Officers of the 'Fleet, to obſerve ſuch commands as his Majeſty 'ſhall pleaſe to give him or them for diſpoſal of 'the Fleet in order to his Majeſties Return; And 'you are to Communicate to his Majeſty the Reſo- 'lution of both Houſes relating to this Inſtruction.

John Brown, Cl. Parl.

The Houſe of Commons added one more Inſtruction to the Commiſſioners; which was, To beſeech his Majeſty, that the Parliament may know where he purpoſeth to take Shipping, and to Land at his coming over, that Preparation may be made for his Reception; and which of his Majeſties Houſes he intendeth to make uſe of at his firſt coming to London; And whether he will come all the Way by Land after he comes on Shore; or whether he will pleaſe to come by Water from Graves-End to London? And that his Majeſty will declare in what manner he is pleaſed to be Received.

The Parliament and City-Commiſſioners have their Audience from his Majeſty at the Hague.

All theſe Commiſſioners in three dayes after their departure from London, arrived at the Hague; And on Wedneſday the ſixteenth of May, our ſtile, they had their ſeveral Audiences by his Majeſty, who received them all with a ſweet and ſerene Countenance, and a Heart full of Content and good Inclinations towards them; and all the City Commiſſioners were Knighted by him. He gave that Evening his Diſpatch to Sir Thomas Clarges, and Commanded him to acquaint the General, He intended to take Shipping at the Bay of Scheveling on Monday after, and to Sayl to Dover and Land there; from whence he would immediately go to Canterbury, and ſtay there ſome time to determine of the manner of his Entrance into London. The Fleet was ſome dayes before in purſuance of the Orders of both Houſes in the ſaid Bay.

Sir Thomas Clarges return with intimation of his Majeſties Reſolution.

On Thurſday early in the Morning, Sir Thomas Clarges attempted by Boat from Scheveling, to get on Board the Admiral, but the Weather was ſo ſtormy he could not do it, till towards the Evening; And then General Mountague Ordered the Norwich Frigate for his Tranſportation: The Winds were ſo contrary, and the Weather ſo ſtormy, that the Pilot could not make any Land in England till Monday Morning, at which time he Landed at Aldbrough in Suffolk, and immediately from thence ſent an Expreſs to the General, and the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, with intimation of his Majeſties Reſolutions: Whereupon his Excellency with a great and gallant Company of the Chiefeſt of the Nobility and Gentry of England, ſet forward from London the 22th of May; and for the more conveniency of Quartering ſo numerous a Company, he advis'd them to divide themſelves into Troops according to the ſeveral Counties, and the intereſt of the Noblemen preſent.

At Rocheſter Sir Thomas Clarges met the General, and preſented unto him his Majeſties Letter, with Royal and moſt endear'd aſſurances of Eſteem from the Beſt of Kings, to the Worthieſt and moſt deſerving of Subjects. The Letter was dated the 26 of May. Directed,

To Our Truſty and Wel-beloved General Monck, To be Communicated to the Officers of the Army.

CHARLES R.

His Majeſties Letter to the General.

'TRuſty and Wel-beloved, We Greet you 'well. You will eaſily believe that your 'Letter of the fifth of this Moneth, by Sir Tho- 'mas Clarges, was very Welcome to Us: And 'that as We muſt alwayes acknowledge the in- 'finite Mercy of God Almighty in diſpoſing the 'Hearts of the Army in ſuch an intire obedience 'to you, for the promoting and carrying on Our 'Service, and the Peace of the Kingdom; So 'We can never be without a Juſt Eſteem of ſuch 'a great and well Diſciplin'd Army, upon which 'the Eyes of the World are ſo much fixed. We 'muſt deſire you to return Our very hearty 'Thanks to the Officers and Souldiers for their 'affection and obedience to Us; and to aſſure 'them from Us, That we ſhall alwayes have an 'intire Confidence in them, and ever acknow- 'ledge them to be the great Inſtruments of Reſto- 'ring Us, to Peace, and Happineſs, and Secu- 'rity, to Us all: And therefore they may not 'only with all imaginable Confidence aſſure 'themſelves, that We will punctually perform 'whatever We have promiſed to them in Our 'Declaration or Letter, but that We will take 'them into Our particular Care and Protection. 'And if the Licence and diſtemper of the time 'ſhall ſo far tranſport any men, as to preſume 'upon memory of former Animoſities, and 'of what is paſt, to uſe any reproaches towards 'them, We will look upon ſuch perſons as diſ- 'turbers of the Peace and Security of the King- 'dom, and ſhall cauſe them to be proſecuted 'accordingly. And towards this Settlement and 'Compoſure, and for the prevention of many 'inconveniencies which may fall out, We think 'nothing ſo neceſſary as Our preſence with you, 'by which (in a very ſhort time) every Member 'of the Army, who ſhall faithfully adhere to 'you in advancement of the Publique Peace, ſhall 'with the bleſſing of God, find himſelf ſecured 'and provided for, to his ſatisfaction. And long- 'ing for that Bleſſed time, We bid you heartily 'farewell.

His Excellency being in his Journey, had no opportunity to communicate this Letter to any any more of his Officers than thoſe that were preſent with him.

But the Fame of his Majeſties tranſcendent Vertues had prevented this written diſcovery of them, and made indelible impreſſions of duty and affection in the Army.

The King intended to have taken ſhipping on Munday, but the Croſsneſs of the Winds forc'd him a little to defer it. His Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, went on Munday and Tueſday to the Fleet, to take Charge thereof as Lord High Admiral: And on Wedneſday the 23. his Sacred Majeſty, the Queen of Bohemia, the Princeſs Royal of Orange, the Dukes of York and Glouceſter, and the Prince of Orange, went on board the Naſeby, (which his Majeſty now named the Royal Charles) where after a Re-paſt, The Queen of Bohemia, the Princeſs Royal, and the Prince of Orange her Sonne, took leave of his Majeſty, and then the Fleet ſet ſayl for England: His Royal Highneſs the Duke of York came in the London; and the Duke of Glouceſter in the Swiftſure, now called the James.

The King and the Dukes take Shipping for England.

His Majeſties Entertainment from the States of Holland.

During the time his Majeſty had remain'd at the Hague, and all the way thither from Breda, the States of Holland entertain'd him with great Magnificence; and at his departure they preſented him with a rich Bed, of the Value of Seven Thouſand pounds Sterling; and as much Linnen as was valued at a Thouſand pounds.

On Friday about three of the Clock in the Morning, the Fleet was in ſight of Dover, whereupon an Expreſs was ſent to the General (then newly come to Canterbury) to haſte to Dover; which he preſently did, and about ten of the Clock came thither.

His Excellency before he came from Canterbury, adviſing with the Earl of Lindſey, and ſome of the other Noble-men that accompanied him, about the conveniency of his Majeſties ſtay at Dover, was informed that he could have no accommodation there for a fourth part of his Train, and thoſe that came to wait on him, and therefore he reſolv'd humbly to move him, at his Landing, to proceed on directly to Canterbury.

His Majeſty lands at Dover.

About One in the Afternoon, his Majeſty Landed at the Beech near Dover-Peer, with the Duke of York, and the Duke of Glouceſter, and many Noble-men and Gentle-men. All that were preſent put themſelves into a Poſture, to ſee the Meeting of the King and the General: The Admirers of Majeſty, were Jealous on his Majeſties Behalf, of too low Condeſcenſion; and the Lovers of Duty fearful on the other Side, of an Oſtentation of Merit: But ſuch an humble Proſtration was made by the General, and ſo generous a Reception by his Majeſty, kiſſing and imbracing him, that all Parties were ſatisfied, to admiration. And his Excellency from that time received ſo great an Impreſſion of the marvellous Goodneſs of his Majeſty, that he reſolv'd what before he had perform'd, out of bounden Duty to his Liege-Lord, ſhould be for ever continued with the ſame obſervance, out of Loyal Affections to his Gracious Soveraign.

His Reception there.

His Majeſty walked from the Water-ſide, towards the Town, with the General, a Canopy being carryed over his Head, and a Chair of State by him; and upon his Excellencies Motion, for his going to Canterbury, for the Reaſons before expreſſed, he haſted to his Coach; in his Paſſage to which, he was met by the Mayor and Aldermen of the Town, with Mr. Reading their Miniſter, who preſented his Majeſty with a large Bible, with Gold Claſps: At one end of the Coach next the King, ſate the Duke of York, and at the other the Duke of Glouceſter, and the General; and the Duke of Buckingham ſate in the Boot. About two miles from Dover, his Majeſty took Horſe, his Royal Brothers rode on his right hand, and the General on his left; After whom the Duke of Buckingham, and ſeveral other Noble-men and Gentlemen follow'd in gallant Equipage.

His Reception at Canterbury.

At his Majeſties Entrance into Canterbury, he was met by the Mayor and Aldermen, and Mr. Lovelace the Recorder, who made an eloquent Speech to him; the Mayor alſo preſented him with a Tankard of Maſſie Gold, and then conducted him to the Palace, where he remained till Monday,

His Majeſty confers the Order of the Garter, upon the General, and the Honour of Knighthood upon the Earl of Winchelſea, the Lord Mordant, and divers others.

The next Day after his Arrival at Canterbury, his Majeſty Dignified his Excellency with the Honour of the Garter; he was brought up to the King by the Earl of Winchelſea, and the Lord Mordant, who were both Knighted with him; and his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, and the Duke of Glouceſter, in great Teſtimony of Reſpect to him, aſſiſted at the Ceremony, and put on the Garter, and the George; Mr. Morrice was alſo Knighted, and Declared Secretary of State; and that Evening his Majeſty ſent the General a Warrant to be Maſter of his Horſe.

His Majeſty likewiſe at Canterbury, confer'd the Honour of Knighthood on Major-General Maſley, Alderman Robinſon, Mr. Daniel Harvy, Mr. Thomas Stewkley, Collonel Roſſiter, Captain Philip Howard, and Mr. Robert Paſton; Moreover, his Excellency the Earl of Southampton, and Mr. Secretary Morrice, were Sworn of the Privy-Council.

He is entertained at Rocheſter by Coll. Gibbons.

On Monday following, his Majeſty came into Rocheſter, where, after he had a little refreſhed himſelf, he went to Chatham, to ſee the Royal Soveraign, and returned that Night to Collonel Gibbons his Houſe, where he lay, and was by the Collonel preſented with a moſt Dutyful and Loyal Addreſs from him and his Regiment which was then Quartered in Rocheſter.

The Army being drawn up on Black-Heath wellcom'd his Majeſty with great joy and acclamation.

From thence his Majeſty march'd to Black-Heath, where the Army was drawn up, and was much pleas'd with the ſight of it; for indeed they ſeem'd all men of one age, and one mind, and were for their number, as gallant Troops as were to be ſeen in the World.

Collonel Knight there moſt humbly preſented to his Majeſty a Writing, which contained the moſt humble and obedient Declaration of the Armies joy, for the Honour of his Majeſties preſence amongſt them; wherein after many dutiful expreſſions of exalted gladneſs for his Majeſties Reſtauration, they beſought, That his Majeſty would have now his great Council about him, who had already given proof of their Loyalty and Wiſdom both to his Majeſty and all his People. They alſo declared, That as they had not been altogether uſeleſs in the Reſtauration of his Sacred Majeſty, to his Crown and Kingdom, and his People to their juſt Rights thereby; ſo they ſhould for the future chearfully ſacrifice their lives, 1660. or whatſoever could be more dear to them, in the ſervice of his Majeſty, againſt all oppoſers whatſoever, and by a ready Obedience to his Majeſties Commands, expreſſe themſelves better than in words.

The manner of his Majeſties Tryumphal Cavalcade through the City of London.

When his Majeſty came to St. George his Fields, the Lord Major and Aldermen humbly on their knees Reverenc'd him, and the Lord Major preſented his Sword, which his Majeſty gave back to him; and after a little Collation in a Tent, provided by the Lord Major, his Maieſty went towards White-Hall in this manner.

All the ſtreets were richly adorn'd with Tapiſtry, from London-Bridge to White-Hall; and as far as Temple-Barre, were equally ranked in good order, the Trained-Band-Forces on the one ſide of the ſtreets, and the ſeveral Companies in their Liveries on the other: From Temple-Barre to White-Hall, the Trained-Bands of Weſtminſter, and the parts adjacent on one ſide, and ſome Companies of the Army on the other, to whom was joyn'd a gallant Company of the late Kings Officers, Commanded by Sir John Stowell.

The Proceſſion was led by Major General Brown, who had a Troop of three hundred, all in Cloth of Silver Doublets; then followed twelve hundred in Velvet-Coats, with Foot-men and Liveries attending them in Purple; Then another Troop led by Alderman Robinſon, in Buff-Coats, with Cloth of Silver-ſleeves, and very rich Green Scarfs; and after theſe a Troup of about a hundred and fifty with Blew Liveries, laced with Silver Lace, with ſix Trumpeters, and ſeven Footmen in Sea-green and Silver: Then a Troop of two hundred and twenty, with thirty Foot-men in Gray and Silver Liveries, and four Trumpeters richly Cloathed; Then another Troop of one hundred and five, with Gray Liveries, and ſix Trumpets: and another of ſeventy with five Trumpets: And then three Troops more, two of three hundred, aod one of one hundred, all richly habited, and bravely mounted. After theſe came two Trumpets with his Majeſties Arms; The Sheriffs men in red Cloaks richly Laced with Silver Lace, to the number of fourſcore, with half Pikes in their hands: then followed ſix hundred of the ſeveral Companies of London on Horſeback, in black Velvet Coats, with Gold Chains, each Company having Footmen in Liveries attending.

After theſe came a Kettle-Drum, five Trumpets, and three Streamers, and many rich red Liveries with Silver Lace: After theſe twelve Miniſters, and then another Kettle-Drum, and four Trumpets, and his Majeſties Life-guard of Horſe, Commanded by the Lord Gerrard; Then three Trumpets in rich Coats, and Satin Doublets, and the City-Marſhal, with eight Footmen in French Green, trim'd with Crimſon and White: the City Waits, and all the City Officers in order: Then the two Sheriffs, and all the Aldermen of London in Scarlet Gowns, and rich Trappings, with Footmen in Liveries, Red Coats Laced with Silver, and Cloth of Gold and Silver. The Heralds and Maces in rich Coats. Then the Lord Major carrying the Sword bare, and next to him the Duke of Buckingham, and the General, and then the Kings Majeſty betwixt the Dukes of York and Glouceſter: Then followed a Troop of Horſe with white colours, and after them, the Generals Life-guard, led by Sir Phillip Howard: Then five Regiments of the Army-Horſe, led by Collonel Knight: And after them, two Troops of Noblemen and Gentlemen.

Thus was his Majeſty conducted to his Royal Pallace at White-Hall, on the nine and twentieth day of May, His Birth-day; and with Him, Peace and Happineſs return'd to His Kingdoms and People, which all good men deſire may be for ever continued to them, under the happy Government of Him and His Poſterity.

His Majeſties Reception by the Lords and Commons in Parliament.

When the Lord Mayor had taken leave of him, he went to the Lords, where he was entertained with a Grave but Eloquent Speech of the Earl of Mancheſters, and from thence to the Banquetting-Houſe, where the whole Houſe of Commons attending him, the Speaker in their Names expreſſed the Joyfull Sence they all had, to behold his Majeſty returned in Safety, and thereby an end was put to that Tyranny and Slavery his good People had endured.

He expreſſeth in brief his Gracious Intentions to them.

The King told them, He was ſo diſordered by his Journey, and with the noiſe ſtill ſounding in his Ears, (which nevertheleſs he confeſs'd was pleaſing to him, becauſe it expreſſed the Affections of his People) that he was thereby unfit to make ſuch a Reply as he deſired; But added, That he took no greater Satisfaction to himſelf in this his Change, than that he found his heart really ſet to endeavour by all means the reſtoring of theſe Nations to their Freedom and Happineſs; which he hoped by the Advice of his Parliament to effect: And that, next to the Honour of God, from whom he chiefly owned the Reſtauration to his Crown, he would ſtudy the Welfare of his People; and not only be a true Defender of the Faith, but a Juſt Aſſertor of the Laws and Liberties of his Subjects.

After the concluſion of theſe Ceremonies, he intended to go to Weſtminſter-Abby to offer up a Thanksgiving to GOD for all his Deliverances and Mercies towards him; but by the Wearineſs he had contracted through the Toil, (however grateful) of that Dayes Action, he was diverted from his intention of going thither; yet would he not for any conſideration be withheld from his Devotion, and his Oblations of Thanks to God, which at that time he made in his Preſence-Chamber, becauſe his Chappel was not yet prepared for his Reception.

The two Dukes and other Peers take their Seats in the Houſe of Lords.

The next day the Dukes of York and Glouceſter took their Places in the Houſe of Peers, as did a while after ſeveral other Peers who were made by his Majeſty beyond the Seas, and Summoned by Writ; (viz.) Henry Jermin Earl of St. Albans, and Baron of St. Edmonds Bury; John Mordant, Viſcount Mordant of Aveland: Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Baron Langdale of Holm; Charles Crofts, Baron Crofts; Sir John Barklay, Baron Barklay.

The chief Officers of State, and of the Kings Houſehold.

In the firſt place after his Majeſties Arrival, were appointed the chief Officers of State, and of his Majeſties Houſhold, his Highneſs the Duke of York was Inveſted with the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England, and Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports: The Lord General Monk was continued Captain General of all the Forces of the Three Kingdoms, and made Maſter of the Horſe to His Majeſty, Sir Edward Hide

Hide (afterwards Earl of Clarendon) was conſtituted Lord High Chancellour of England: The Earl of Southampton Lord High Treaſurer of England: Sir Edward Nicholas, and Sir William Morrice, Chief Secretaries of State. The Marqueſs of Ormond was appointed Lord Steward: and the Earl of Mancheſter, Lord Chamberlain of his Majeſties Houſhold: Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Treaſurer of the Houſhold; and Sir Charles Berkley, Comptroller: and Sir George Carteret, Vice-Chamberlain of the Houſhold, and afterwards Treaſurer of the Navy: Beſides ſeveral others, who for their Eminent Loyalty and good Services, were advanc'd to Places of Higheſt Truſt and Dignity in Court and Commonwealth. Moreover, his Majeſties Privy Councel conſiſted of theſe Perſons following:

The Lords of his Majeſties Privy Council.

The Duke of York.
Lord Chancellour.
Marqueſs of Ormond.
Marqueſs of Dorcheſter.
Earl of Lindſey, Lord high Chamberlain of England.
Earl of Berkſhire.
Earl of Southampton.
Earl of Norwich.
Lord Say and Seale.
Lord Wentworth.
Lord Seymour.
Mr. Denzell Holles.
Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Traſurer of His Majeſties Houſhold.
Sir Edward Nicholas.
Sir George Carteret, Vice-Chamberlain to his Majeſty.
Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper.
Collonel Charles Howard.
The Duke of Glouceſter.
Lord General Monk.
Marqueſs of Hertford.
Earl of Mancheſter, Lord Chamberlain of the King's Houſhold.
Earl of Northumberland.
Earl of St. Albans.
Earl of Leiceſter.
Lord Culpeper.
Lord Roberts.
Mr. Arthur Anneſley.
Sir Charles Barkley, Comptroller of his Majeſties Houſhold.
Sir William Morrice.
General Mountague.

The Clerks of the Privy Council were Sir Richard Brown Knight and Baronet, (who having been 19 Years Reſident in the Court of France for his Majeſty and his Royal Father, manag'd that Imployment with extraordinary Prudence, Addreſs and Integrity, and in whoſe Chappel at Paris the Liturgie of the Church of England had been ſolemnly kept up during its Eclipſe at home) Sir Edward Walker Garter King of Arms. John Nicholas Eſq; Eldeſt Son to the Secretary of State; And Sir George Lane, Secretary to the Marqueſs of Ormond.

Military Commands conferr'd upon ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen.

In the next place, ſpecial Care was taken for the committing of all Military Offices of higheſt Truſt, as well as the Civil already mention'd, into the hands of ſuch Perſons as were judg'd moſt faithful to the Kings Service; ſo that the Governments of all the moſt Important Caſtles, Fortreſſes, and Iſlands, and the firſt Commands of the ſeveral Regiments of the Army, were by the Lord General conferr'd upon ſuch Lords and other Perſons of Honour as the King was pleas'd to recommend unto him to that Effect, until ſuch time as the Army could conveniently be disbanded. Likewiſe, for the farther ſettling of the Militia of the Nation, there were of the Chief Nobility of the Land Conſtituted Lord-Lieutenants of the ſeveral Counties each having under them, as Deputy-Lieutenants, ſuch Gentlemen of the ſame Counties as had moſt eminently ſhewn their affections to his Majeſty. 1660.

The Commons ſet upon the Act of General Pardon.

The Houſe of Commons in the mean time, applyed themſelves to the perfecting of an Act of General Pardon, which was read Twice in the Houſe the One and Thirtieth of this Moneth, thereby complying with that great Clemency and Indulgence of his Majeſty to his People, expreſſed in his moſt gracious Letter from Breda. They had in the firſt Propoſition of this Act, deſigned to except from Pardon ſeveral of the Judges of the late King, and others inſtrumental in the perpetration of that horrid Treaſon: of which they had in Cuſtody Eight perſons, (viz.) Harriſon, Carew, Clement, and Jones, of the Judges; Cook who was the Proſecutor, Hacker Captain of the Halberdeers, and Collonel Axtel; alſo Hugh Peters the Miniſter, a virulent Incendiary in the action, who for a while had been ſculking up and down in ſecret, was at length taken in Southwark. There were others that had been ſeduced into that Treaſon, (viz.) Collonel Richard Ingoldsby, Francis Laſſels, and John Hutchinſon; but ſo much was ſaid in the Houſe in their favours, that they were not made culpable with the reſt. As for Ingoldsby, it was made to appear, that Oliver Cromwell, without his conſent, ſet his hand and ſeal to the Warrant for Execution of the King: Beſides that, by many Actions of his Loyalty ſince, and his Engagement in Sir George Booth's buſineſs, and againſt Lambert, (as is before related) he had given eminent teſtimony of his abhorrency of ſo foul a Crime. Laſſels had never been in the High Court of Juſtice, and but once at any meeting with them, and at that time he declared his diſſent to their proceedings. And Hutchinſon had been a very early Convert, and appeared much againſt that execrable Oath of Abjuration of the King's Perſon and Poſterity, in that part of the Parliament which ſate at the time of General Monck's March into London.

The King comes to the Parliament, and gives his Royal Aſſent to ſeveral Bills.

This Act of General Pardon had ſo many particulars in it of different nature, that it took up very much time; but nevertheleſs, the Parliament omitted not to perfect ſome neceſſary Lawes for the ſafety of the Government. On the ſecond of June, the Parliament having the day before intimated to the King, that they had prepared Three Bills for him, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Lords, and having ſent to the Houſe of Commons to attend him, there gave his Royal Aſſent to them; (viz.) To an ACT for Confirmation of an Ordinance made by the Lords and Commons in his abſence, of the raiſing of Seventy Thouſand Pounds a Moneth for Three Moneths. An ACT for Confirmation of the preſent Parliament.

1660. And, An ACT for the Continuance of Proceſs in Judicial Proceedings. Which laſt, was for avoiding of Diſcontinuances in the Courts of Weſtminſter, becauſe the firſt four Returns of Eaſter-Term could not be conveniently kept, and to prevent the abatement of Writs that were not iſſued in the Kings Name before his Return to the exerciſe of Government.

His Majeſty alſo preſt them (as well by his particular Charge, as by the Lord Chancellor's Speech) to haſten their paſſing of the Bill of Indempnity, which (as well as all other Bills of Publick Concernment) he was ready to Sign; whereupon this Bill was from thenceforth the grand Buſineſs of both Houſes untill it was finiſh'd: Nor could it be finiſh'd till after ſome conſiderable time, and many large and ſerious Conſultations. In the mean time, the Two Houſes themſelves deſired to lay hold upon this Amneſtie in the Name of the whole Nobility and Commonalty of the Nation: which being eaſily granted by the King, the Ceremony was performed in the Banqueting-Houſe, where they waited upon his Majeſty to that end.

About this time came forth a Proclamation, whereby it was declared, That all ſuch of the late Kings Judges as did not render themſelves, ſhould be Excepted out of the General Pardon: And thereupon Adrian Stroop, and Nineteen others of them conceal'd in ſeveral parts, preſented themſelves to the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and were committed to Cuſtody. The Lord Grey of Grooby, and Four and twenty more were dead; and Thomas Scott, and Nineteen others eſcaped beyond the Seas, but were attained by Act of Parliament, as ſhall be hereafter expreſſed; And Scott was, ſhortly after his Eſcape, taken at Bruxels, and by the diligence of the Kings Agent there ſent into England, and ſent to the Tower.

The Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance taken by both Houſes of Parliament.

The Kings Servants and Officers of his Houſhould, &c.

On the 4th of June, the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance to the King were tender'd to all the Members of both Houſes of Parliament, with the Kings Servants and Officers of his Houſehold, by the Lord Steward, and the Lord Chamberlain: And by Order of Parliament, of the 4th of the ſame Moneth, the Lord General was deſired to take an effectual Care that the ſame Oaths ſhould be adminiſtred to all the Officers and Souldiers of the Armies under his Command; And the Lord Chancellor to that end was alſo deſired to Iſſue forth Commiſſions under the Great Seal of England, to ſuch perſons as the Lord General ſhould nominate and appoint, for adminiſtring the ſaid Oaths to the Officers and Souldiers accordingly. This Order was with all imaginable Care executed both by the General and the Chancellor: And to ſettle the Army ſo as it might be moſt ſerviceable to his Majeſty, he removed ſeveral Collonels and other Officers, and placed divers of the Loyal Nobility and Gentry in their places.

His Majeſties Arrival Congratulated by the People from all parts of the Nation.

As the generality of the people had a little before, upon the concluſion of his Majeſties Admiſſion into his Dominions, and his preparation to come over, given great demonſtrations of their affection and Loyalty to him, by their univerſal alacrity in proclaiming him throughout the Three Nations; So likewiſe, immediately after he was come, they were no leſs forward to manifeſt their Duty and Allegiance by Congratulatory Addreſſes from all parts of the Kingdom, (the like duty being perform'd by ſeveral of the Nobility and Gentry both of Scotland and Ireland,) alſo thoſe Towns and Corporations that had bought out their ſeveral Fee-Farm Rents belonging formerly to the Crown, and by the late Commonwealth alienated from it, ſent their Deputies to his Majeſty, to make a voluntary Surrender of them back again unto him. Others preſented him with Summs of Gold and other Gifts according to their abilities: But the City of London, as being the firſt, the richeſt and moſt Honourable, and the Seat of Kings for many Ages, judg'd themſelves oblig'd in point of Duty and Reputation, to exceed all the reſt in the glory of their performances toward their Soveraign; and therefore to the ſplendour of their former preparations at his firſt Reception and Triumphal Extrada, they added the Coſt of a moſt Magnificent Entertainment at Guild-Hall, (which was for that very purpoſe richly beautified and adorn'd) to which the King, the two Princes his Brothers, the Lords of the Privy Council, the Two Houſes of Parliament, and the Chief Officers of State being ſolemnly Invited, were, on Thurſday the 5 of July, conducted thither in very great Pomp by the Lord Mayor and the Grandees of the City, where they were Treated in a Royal manner with the choiceſt of delicacies, with excellent Muſick, and whatever elſe could be thought on or delightful for ſo Illuſtrious an Aſſembly.

His Entertainment at Guild-Hall.

He ſets forth a Proclamation againſt Debauchery and Profaneſs.

Nor was his Majeſty wanting on the other ſide to give ſuch publick Teſtimonies of his Vertue and Prudence, as might render him deſervedly glorious in the Eſteem of all ſober and moderate perſons, and that by ſeveral wholeſome Edicts, eſpecially by that Seaſonable Proclamation which he publiſh'd, one of the firſt things he did after his Arrival, for the diſcountenancing and puniſhing of Debauchery, Profaneneſs and all manner of Vice: Dated the 31 of May, 1660.

The King ſate very frequently in Council about the great Affairs of Government; and upon Information that many Iriſh Rebels had in unuſual Numbers reſorted from beyond the Seas to England and Ireland, and were ſo inſolent as to diſpoſſeſs many Souldiers, and Adventurers in Ireland, who had poſſeſſion of their forfeited Eſtates; at the humble Requeſt of the Parliament, the King publiſhed a Proclamation, Commanding all Iriſh Rebels (ſuch only excepted as by Articles had the Liberty of reſiding in his Majeſties Dominions, and have not forfeited the ſame,) that ſtill ſtay in, or ſhall reſort to, England or Ireland, to be apprehended and proceeded againſt as Rebels and Traytors: And that the Adventurers and Souldiers ſhould not be diſturbed in their Poſſeſſions, untill the King by Advice of Parliament ſhall take further Order, or they be Legally Evicted. And requiring all Officers both Civil and Military, to ſee the ſaid Proclamation put in Execution.

The Kings Proclamation concerning the Iriſh Rebels.

But notwithſtanding his Majeſties great Care and Zeal to Settle and Compoſe all publique Differences, many ill-affected people in Pamphlets aſperſed his Actions, maliciouſly endeavouring to inſinuate, that he intended nothing leſs than the performance of his Promiſes from Breda:

Breda; Which made him ſend a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons by Sir William Morrice, to quicken their Debates about the Act of General Pardon and Indempnity, as that which would beſt quiet the Minds of his Subjects.

The Kings Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, about the Act of Pardon.

He told them, 'He had too ample a manifeſta-'tion of their Affections and Duty towards him, '(the good Effects of which was notorious to 'the World) to make the leaſt doubt of the con-'tinuance and improvement thereof, or in the 'leaſt degree to diſlike what they had done, or 'to Complain of what they had left undone: 'And that he knew well the Weight of thoſe Af-'fairs which depended upon their Counſels, 'and the time that muſt unavoidably be ſpent, 'where there muſt be naturally difference of O-'pinions and Judgments amongſt thoſe whoſe 'deſires of the Publique Peace and Safety were 'the ſame. And that neither he nor they muſt be 'over-much troubled, if they found their good 'Intention and unwearied pains, taken to reduce 'thoſe good Intentions into reall Acts for the 'Quiet and Security of the Nation, miſ-repre-'ſented, and miſ-interpreted, by thoſe who are 'in truth afflicted to ſee the publique Diſtracti-'ons, by Gods Bleſſing, ſo near an end; and 'by others upon whoſe VVeakneſſe, Fears and 'Jealouſies, the activity and cunning of thoſe 'ill men hath had too great an Influence.

'That how wonderful and miraculous ſoever 'the great harmony of affections between him 'and his Subjects is, (it being ſo viſible to the 'VVorld, that there ſcarce appears the view of 'any Cloud to overſhadow or diſturb it) yet it 'is not to be thought that God Almighty had 'wrought the Miracle to that degree, that a Na-'tion ſo miraculouſly divided for ſo many Years, 'would be ſo ſoon and intirely united in their 'Affections and Endeavours as were to be wiſhed; 'but that the Evil Conſciences of many conti-'nued ſo awake for miſchief, they would not 'be willing to take reſt themſelves, or ſuffer o-'thers to take it: And that they all had too ſad 'Experience of the unhappy Effects of Fears and 'Jealouſies, how groundleſs and unreaſonable 'ſoever, not to think it very neceſſary to apply all 'timely and proper Remedies to thoſe Diſtem-'pers, and to prevent the Inconveniencies and 'Miſchiefs which ſo naturally flow from thence: 'That he well foreſaw, That the great violati-'on which the Laws of the Land had for ſo many 'years ſuſtained, had fill'd the hearts of the 'People with a terrible apprehenſion of inſecu-'rity to themſelves, if all they had ſaid and done 'ſhould be liable to be examined and puniſhed 'by thoſe Laws which had been ſo violated: 'And that nothing could eſtabliſh the Security of 'King and People, but a full Proviſion that the 'returning to the reverence and obedience of the 'Law (which is good for all,) ſhould not turn 'to the ruine of any who were willing and fit to 'receive that Protection hereafter from the Law, 'and to pay that Subjection to it, which were 'Juſt and neceſſary; and therefore, he ſaid, he 'made a free Offer of a General Pardon in ſuch 'a manner as was expreſſed in his Declaration; 'and how ready and deſirous he was to make 'good the ſame, appeared by his Proclamation 'iſſued out upon and according to their deſire: 'However, it was evident, that all he had offer-'ed or did offer, did not enough Compoſe the 'Minds of his People; Nor in their Opinions 'could their Security be provided for, till the 'Act of Indempnity and Oblivion were paſs'd. 1660.

'He ſaid, He found great induſtry uſed, (by thoſe 'who did not wiſh that Peace to the Kingdom 'they ought to do) to perſwade his good Sub-'jects that he had no mind to make good his Pro-'miſes, which he deſired to perform for his own 'ſake, as well at theirs. And that therefore he 'did very earneſtly recommend it to them, that 'all expedition might be uſed in the paſſing That 'moſt neceſſary Act, whereby his good Subjects 'generally would be ſatisfied that their ſecurity 'was in their own hands, and depended upon 'their future Actions, and that they were free 'for all paſt, and ſo all the endeavours of ill men 'would be diſappointed, who would perſwade 'them not to do well now, becauſe they had 'done amiſs heretofore. And that he was the 'more engaged to this his Recommendation, be-'cauſe upon the reflection of their eminent Zeal 'and Affection for his Service, and hearty Con-'currence with him in all things deſired from 'them, men were apt to perſwade others (though 'not believing it themſelves,) that the paſſing of 'this Act was therefore not deſired, becauſe he 'did not enough preſs the diſpatch of it; which 'he did deſire from his heart, and was confident 'they would the ſooner do it, upon his earneſt 'recommendation.

This Meſſage did ſo much quicken their De-bates, that they diſpatch'd the Bill in a very ſhort time, and ſent it up to the Lords, and the Peo-ples Minds were much Compoſed thereby, and the more, for that his Majeſty by a Proclamati-on after it, did declare a kind of impatience for the delay thereof.

About the beginning of July, General Monck was by Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England made Duke of Albemarle, Earl of Tor-rington, Baron Monk of Potheridge, Beauchampe, and Teyes, and Summoned by Writ to the Houſe of Peers. The Titles of Albemarle and Beau-champe were conferr'd on him, becauſe he was deſcended from Margaret, one of the Daughters and Co-heirs of Richard Beauchampe Earl of Al-bemarle and Warwick, who was married to the Famous Warriour John Talbott Earl of Shrews-bury, well known in France, whoſe Son John had only one Daughter married to Edward Grey Viſcount Liſle, whoſe Daughter and Heir Eliza-beth Grey was married to Arthur Plantagenett, a natural Son of King Edward the Fourth, who was in her right Viſcount Liſle; and Frances one of the Daughters and Co-heirs of the ſaid Viſ-count Liſle, was married to Sir Thomas Monk, great Grand-father to the preſent Duke of Al-bemarle. General Monk created Duke of Albemarle.

And a few dayes after, Mr. Edward Mounta-gue, one of the Generals at Sea, was made a Knight of the Order of the Garter, and by Let-ters Patent dignified with the Honours of Earl of Sandwich, Viſcount Montague of Hinchingbrook, and Baron of St. Needs. And the Marqueſs of Ormond was made Earl of Brecknock, and Baron Butler of Lanthony; and theſe Two in the ſame Order they were created, had Writs to Summon them to the Houſe of Peers. Which Marqueſs was afterwards created Duke of Ormond. General Mountague made Earl of Sandwich. The Marqueſs of Ormond made Duke of Ormond.

The

1660. The Lords in Parliament were in Conſultation to except all from Pardon that had been Judges in any High Court of Juſtice, which was no more than ſuch men deſerved, who could ſo maliciouſly contribute to the Subverſion of the good Laws and Government of their native Country; But the Kings Clemency extended to all who were not guilty of his Father's Murder; and obſerving thoſe Debates to obſtruct much the ſpeedy perfecting that Bill he ſo earneſtly deſired to have finiſh'd, On the 27th of July he went to the ſaid Houſe, and in a handſome and moſt gracious Speech, expreſſed his Zeal for it in the following words:

My Lords,

The Kings Speech to the Parliament, to haſten the perfecting of the Act of Oblivion.

'WHen I came firſt hither to you, which was within two or three dayes after 'I came to White-Hall, I did with as much earneſtneſs as I could, both by my Self, and the Chancellour, recommend to You and the Houſe of Commons, the ſpeedy diſpatch of the Act of Indempnity, as a neceſſary Foundation of that 'Security We all pray for; I did ſince, by a particular Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, again preſs them to haſten that Important Work; 'And did likewiſe by a Proclamation, publiſh to 'all the Kingdom, That I did with impatience 'expect that that Act would be preſented to me 'for my Aſſent, as the moſt reaſonable and ſolid Foundation of that Peace, Happineſs, and 'Security I hope and pray for to my Self and all 'my Dominions. I will not deny it to you, I 'thought the Houſe of Commons too long about 'that Work, and therefore now it is come up 'to You, I would not have you Guilty of the 'ſame delay. I thank God, I have the ſame Intentions and Reſolutions now I am here with 'You, which I had at Breda, and believe that I 'owe my being here, to Gods bleſſing upon the 'Intentions and Reſolutions I then expreſſed to 'have. I will read to you what I then ſaid:

'And to the end that the fear of Puniſhment 'may not engage any, Conſcious to themſelves 'of what is paſſed, to a perſeverance in Guilt 'for the future, by expoſing the quiet and happineſs of their Country, in the Reſtauration 'both of King, Peers, and People, to their Juſt, 'Ancient, and Fundamental Rights; We do 'by theſe Preſents declare, That We do grant 'a Free and General Pardon, which We are ready upon demand, to paſſe under Our Great 'Seal of England, to all Our Subjects of what 'Degree or Quality ſoever, who within Fourty 'dayes after the publiſhing hereof, ſhall lay 'hold upon this Our Grace and Favour, and ſhall 'by any publique Act declare their doing ſo; And 'that they return to the Loyalty and Obedience 'of good Subjects (excepting only ſuch Perſons as ſhall hereafter be excepted by Parliament.)

'Thoſe only excepted, let all Our Loving 'Subjects, how faulty ſoever, rely upon the 'Word of a King ſolemnly given by this preſent 'Declaration, That no Crime whatſoever committed againſt Us or Our Royal Father, before the Publication of this, ſhall ever riſe in 'Judgement, or be brought in Queſtion againſt 'any of them to the leaſt endamagement of them, 'either in their Lives, Liberties, or Eſtates, or '(as far forth as lyes in Our Power) ſo much 'as to the prejudice of their Reputations, by 'any reproach or term of diſtinction from the 'reſt of Our beſt Subjects: We Deſiring and Ordaining, That henceforward all Notes of Diſcord, Separation, and Difference of Parties be 'utterly aboliſhed among all Our Subjects, whom 'We Invite and Conjure to a perfect Union among themſelves under Our Protection, for the 'Re-ſettlement of Our Juſt Rights, and Theirs, 'in a Free Parliament; By which, upon the 'Word of a King, We will be Adviſed.

'My Lords, If you do not Joyn with Me in 'extinguiſhing this Fear, which keeps the hearts 'of men awake, and apprehenſive of ſafety and 'ſecurity; You keep Me from performing My 'Promiſe, which if I had not made, I am perſwaded neither I, nor You had been now here: 'I pray let Us not deceive thoſe who brought, or 'permitted Us to come together. I knew well 'there were ſome Men who could neither forgive 'themſelves, nor be forgiven by Us; and I thank 'you for your Juſtice towards thoſe, the immediate Murtherers of my Father: And I will deal 'truly with you, I never thought of excepting 'any other. I pray think well upon what I have 'offered, and the benefit you and I have received from that offer; and encourage and oblige 'all other preſons, by not excluding them from 'the benefit of this Act. This Mercy and Indulgence is the beſt way to bring them to a true 'repentance, and to make them more ſevere to 'themſelves when they find We are not ſo to 'them. It will make them good Subjects to me, 'and good Friends and Neighbours to you; and 'We have then all Our end, and you ſhall find 'this the ſecureſt Expedient to prevent future 'miſchief. Therefore I do earneſtly deſire and 'Conjure you, to depart from all particular animoſities and Revenge, or memory of paſt 'provocations, and that you will paſſe this Act 'without other Exceptions, than of thoſe who 'were immediately guilty of that Murther of my 'Father.

'My Lords, I have told you my Opinion, 'and I hope you will be of the ſame. If any perſons appear of ſuch dangerous and obſtinate 'Principles, that the Peace of the Kingdom can'not be preſerved whileſt they have Liberty in it, 'ſome other courſe may be taken, that they 'ſhall not be able to do hurt; aud I aſſure you, 'there is nothing can enable them to do ſo much 'harm, as the deferring the paſſing this Act.

'I hope I need ſay nothing of Ireland, and that 'they alone ſhall not be without the benefit of 'my Mercy: They have ſhewed much affection 'to me abroad, and you will have a care of my 'Honour, and of what I have promiſed to them. 'I do again conjure you, that you will uſe all expedition in the diſpatch of this Bill.

This Speech did not only expedite the paſſing of this Act in the Houſe of Peers, but give a general Satisfaction to the People, who were exceedingly quieted in their Minds with the Kings reſolute Care on the behalf of all his Subjects; nor was his Mind ſo intent on this neceſſary Affair, as to neglect the other Concerns of Government; But obſerving, that the late Differences of his People had created many Animoſities ſities amongſt them, which occaſioned frequent Duels, he thought fit to prevent the Inconveniencies thereof by a Proclamation; whereby he manifeſted ſo great a diſlike of Duels, as ſtrictly to command all his Subjects whatſoever, neither by themſelves nor any other by Meſſage, Word or Writing, or other wayes or means to Challenge or cauſe to be Challenged any perſon or perſons to fight in Duel, nor to carry, accept, nor conceal any Challenge, nor actually to fight, or be ſecond to any therein.

His Majeſties Proclamation againſt Fighting of Duels.

And he further Declared, That every perſon offending againſt his Commands herein, ſhould not only incurre his Diſpleaſure, but be incapable of holding any Office in his Service, and never after be permitted to come to Court or perferr'd, beſides the ſuffering ſuch puniſhment as the Law ſhould inflict on ſuch offenders; And all perſons that ſhould accept or know of ſuch Challenges, and not reveal the ſame to one of the Privy Councel, or the next Juſtice of Peace, ſhould be lyable to the ſame Penalties. And further, he was ſo ſevere in this matter, as to forbid any Interceſſion to be made for Offenders againſt this Proclamation.

By this good Government, a general tranquility appear'd in all the King's Dominions; and to leſſen the Publique Charge, the Parliament were providing money to disband the Armies, and pay off ſuch of the Ships as were more than needful for the Guard of the Seas: And in order hereunto, the General was ſo provident, as to give Order to the Muſter-Maſter-General to admit of no new Souldiers in any Troops or Companies, and the Officers likewiſe had Charge to entertain none upon any vacancies.

The Engliſh Commiſſioners in Scotland having been imployed as Judges for the Government of that Nation, and having had their Commiſſions continued in force for ſome time after the King's coming in, they were at length by the Letters from the Duke of Albemarle acquainted with the King's Pleaſure, That from the 22. of Auguſt they ſhould ceaſe to act any more in this their Judicatory power, in regard that Kingdom was thenceforth to be reduc'd to its ancient form of government; in order to which, Proclamation was made in the King's Name, for the ſpeedy Convening of the Committee of the Three Eſtates of Scotland; a Parliament alſo being to be called there within a few Months; And in the interim, the Chief Miniſters of State were Conſtituted; The Earl of Glencarn was made Lord Chancellour; the Lord Craford-Lindſey Lord Treaſurer, the Earl of Caſſiles Juſtice-general, the Earl of Lauderdale Chief Secretary of State, and General Middleton the Kings Commiſſioner, with ſeveral others.

A Committee of Eſtates Convened in Scotland.

The chief Miniſters of State Conſtituted in Scotland.

The Committee of Eſtates being aſſembled, made it their firſt care to keep all things in peace and quiet, and obedience to the preſent Government; for nowithſtanding the late unanimous concurrence of the People at Edenborough (as well as other places) in the publick Proclaiming of his Majeſty, yet after a ſhort while, there began to diſcover it ſelf a ſpirit of diſcontent among certain Scotch Miniſters, who were of the principal Sticklers of the Kirk-party, as appear'd by their meeting together at a place appointed, for the drawing up of a Remonſtrance concerning certain things wherein they thought themſelves aggrieved; which the Committee of Eſtates having notice of, ſent forthwith to apprehend them, and clapt them up in priſon; and for the prevention of the like diſturbances for the future, ſet forth a Proclamation againſt all Unlawfull Meetings, and Seditious Papers.

Certain Scotch Miniſters impriſon'd by Order of the Committee of Eſtates.

And the ſame thing that befell theſe Miniſters, hapned alſo to their Country-man the Marqueſs of Argyle, who notwithſtanding that he came to Court with others of the Nobility and Gentry of Scotland, upon pretence of tendring his Service to his Majeſty, yet he had not it ſeems carried himſelf ſo blameleſly, but that a ſufficient cauſe was found for the laying of High Treaſon to his Charge, and committing him thereupon a priſoner to the Tower; and together with him were committed the Marqueſs of Antrim, Sir Henry Vane, and Sir Arthur Haſlerigg, beſides ſeveral others that follow'd ſoon after.

The Marqueſs of Argile and others ſent to the Tower of London.

In Ireland the Convention that had aſſembled there upon the Change of Government, as ſoon as they had taken order for the ſettliug of things in that Nation, in Conformity to the Kings Authority, (Colonel Eyres, who endeavour'd to raiſe a Party in oppoſition to it, being reduc'd by Sir Charles Coot) and had appointed from among them certain Commiſſioners to wait upon his Majeſty with their Gratulations and Deſires, thought fit to diſſolve themſelves, in expectation of the Kings Pleaſure for the Calling of a full Parliament, and to make way for the Ancient Conſtitution of the Government by a Lord Lieutenant, as had been determin'd by the King and his Council.

The Convention in Ireland diſſolve themſelves.

The Act of Indempnity was ſent from the Lords to the Commons with ſeveral alterations, to which the Commons were very unwilling to agree; for they had ſubjected Twenty that were not the Kings Judges, to be liable to ſuch Pains and Penalties not extending to life, as ſhould be inflicted by another Act to be paſſed in this Parliament: Whereas the Lords finding the King's Inclination to tend towards the Pardoning of all but ſuch as were his Fathers Judges, or otherwiſe Actors in his Murder, they diſagreed to that part of the Act, as to all thoſe named by the Commons, except Sir Arthur Haſlerigg, Sir Henry Vane, and Collonel John Lambert, who were eſteemed to be ſo maliciouſly active in oppoſition to his Majeſties Government, as to be excepted from any Conditions of Pardon: The Commons for ſome time adhered to their firſt Reſolution, but after ſeveral Conferences, they agreed with the Lords in all things, except ſome little alterations to their frame of the Act; Vane and Lambert were excepted, but Haſlerigg remained liable to ſuch Pains, Penalties, and Forfeitures, as ſhould be inflicted on him, not extending to life; and the reſt of thoſe put under the ſame Qualification by the Commons that were not of the King's Judges, were made only with others incapable of Offices, as ſhall be hereafter ſhewen, when we come to write of the parts of that Act.

The Debate between the Lords and Commons concerning the Act of Indempnity.

That which put Sir Arthur Haſlerigg under ſo favorable a Qualification, was an Engagement made to him by the Duke of Albemarle; For Haſlerigg coming to him, when he perceiv'd the Revolution haſten towards the Reſtauration

Sir Arthur Haſlerigg Pardon'd, upon the Mediation of the Duke of Albemarle.

1660. ſtauration of the King and his Government, he expoſtulated with him about it, in reference to the ſecurity of his own Condition: The Duke was unwilling to make him deſperate, becauſe he had at that time a Regiment of Horſe, and a Regiment of Foot in the Garriſons of New-Caſtle, Tinmouth, Berwick, and Carliſle, under his Government; which (if he had oppoſed) could not have been reduced to obedience without the effuſion of Blood, which his Excellency much endeavoured to avoid in all the progreſs of his Actions; And therefore told him, If he would quietly give up his command, and retire to his Houſe, he would endeavour to ſecure him in his Life and Eſtate, and doubted not to effect it. This being made known at a Conference by the Houſe of Commons, was juſtified with great modeſty by the Duke in the Houſe of Peers, and his Life was thereupon pardoned in the Act, and a ſmall time after, his Eſtate alſo was; at the mediation of the Duke, granted to his Heir, a man averſe to his Fathers diſloyal Principles: (Sir Arthur himſelf, a while after his Impriſonment, dying of a Feaver in the Tower.)

An Inſtance of His Majeſties affection to his People.

At this laſt Conference of the Lords and Commons, the Lord Chancellor took occaſion to ſpeak of the Kings affection to his People, by a very remarkable Inſtance, ſaying, That he being imployed in an Embaſſy to Spain, had it ſtrictly given him in charge by his Majeſty to avow and declare, That the horrid Murther of his Royal Father was not the Act of the Parliament or People of England, but of a very wretched and little company of Miſcreants in the Kingdom. Which was ſo pleaſing to the Houſe of Commons, that upon the report of it to them, they Ordered ſuch of the Privy Council as were Members of that Houſe, to preſent to his Majeſtie the humble and thankfull Senſe they had of his Juſtice and Favour for that Juſt Defence he had been graciouſly pleas'd to make in behalf of the Parliament and People of England.

A few dayes after this, that is to ſay, the 29th of Auguſt, The King had Notice that there were Five Acts prepared for his Royal Aſſent, and he therefore repaired to the Lords Houſe, and ſent for the Commons to him, where he aſſented to them. The Acts were;

Several Acts Sign'd.

1. An Act for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings. 2. An Act for a ſpeedy Proviſion of Money to pay off and disband all the Forces of this Kingdom both by Sea and Land. 3. An Act for the reſtraining the taking of Exceſſive Uſury. 4. An Act of General Pardon, Indempnity, and Oblivion. 5. An Act for a perpetual Anniverſary Thanksgiving on the Twenty Ninth day of May, (the day of his Majeſties Nativity and Reſtauration.)

At the paſſing of which ACTS, he expreſs'd himſelf in theſe words:

My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons.

The Kings Speech in Parliament at the paſſing of thoſe Acts.

I Have been here ſometimes before with you, but never with more willingneſs, than I am at this time. And there be few men in the Kingdome, who have longed more impatiently to have thoſe Bills paſſed, than I have done to paſſe them; and I hope they will be the Foundation of much Security and Happineſs to Us all. I do very willingly pardon all that is pardoned by this Act of Indempnity, to that time which is mentioned in the Bill; Nay, I will tell you, That from that time to this day, I will not uſe great Severity, except in ſuch Caſes where the Malice is notorious, and the Publique Peace exceedingly concern'd: But for the time to come, the ſame Diſcretion and Conſcience which diſpoſed me to the Clemency I have expreſſed, which is moſt agreeable to my Nature, will oblige me to all Rigour and Severity, how contrary ſoever it be to my Nature, towards thoſe who ſhall not now acquieſce, but continue to manifeſt their ſedition and diſlike of the Government, either to Action or Words.

And I muſt conjure you all (my Lords and Gentlemen) to concurr with Me in this Juſt and neceſſary ſeverity; and that you will in your ſeveral Stations be ſo Jealous of the Publique Peace, and of my particular Honour, that you will cauſe exemplary Juſtice to be done upon thoſe who are guilty of Seditious Speeches or Writings, as well as thoſe who break out into ſeditious Actions: And that you will believe thoſe who delight in reproaching and traducing My Perſon, not to be well affected to You and the Publique Peace.

Never King valued himſelf more upon the affections of his people than I do; Nor do I know a better way to make My Self ſure of your Affections, than by being Juſt and Kind to you all: And whileſt I am ſo, I pray let the World ſee that I am poſſeſſed of your Affections.

For your Pole-Bill, I do thank you as much as if the Money were to come into my own Coffers: and wiſh with all my heart that it may amount to as great a Summe as you reckon upon. If the Work be well and orderly done to which it is deſigned. I am ſure I ſhall be the richer by it in the end: and upon My Word, if I had wherewithal, I would My Self help you, ſo much I deſire the Buſineſs done.

I pray very earneſtly, as faſt as Money comes in, diſcharge that great burthen of the Navy, and disband the Army as faſt as you can; and till you can disband the reſt, make a proviſion for their ſupport. I do conjure you, as you love Me, let Me not hear the noyſe of Free-Quarter, which will be imputed to My want of Care and Government, how Innocent ſoever I am; and therefore be ſure you prevent it.

I am ſo confident of your Affections, that I will not move you in any thing that immediately relates to My Self; and yet I muſt tell you, I am not richer, that is, I have not ſo much Money in my Purſe as when I came to you: The truth is, I have lived principally ever ſince upon what I brought with Me; which was indeed your Money, for you ſent it to Me, and I thank you for it. The Weekly expence of the Navy, eats up all you have given Me by the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage. Nor have I been able to give my Brothers one Shilling ſince I came into England, nor to keep any Table in my Houſe but what I eat my ſelf. And that which troubles Me moſt, is, to ſee ſo many of you come to Me to White-Hall, and to think you muſt go ſomewhere elſe to ſeek your Dinner.

I do not mention this to you, as any thing that troubles Me; do but take care of the Publique, and for

for what is neceſſary for the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, and take your own time for My Own Particular, which I am ſure you will provide for with as much affection and frankneſs as I can deſire.

Act for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings.

The ACT for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings, was as neceſſary at this Juncture, as the Act of General Pardon, ſince without this, beſides many other Inconveniencies, ſo great a Concuſſion would have been in moſt mens Eſtates as would have made them ſubject to perpetual Incertainties.

1. 'By this Law, All Proceedings in Law or 'Equity in all or any of the Courts at Weſt-'minſter, or in Wales, or in the County Pala-'tine, or Dutchy of Lancaſter, or Berwick, or 'other inferiour Courts, and all things done by 'the Judges and Officers in purſuance thereof, or 'of the Court of Admiralties, Delegates, Juſtices 'of Aſſize, Niſi Prius, Commiſſion of Sewers, 'Bankrupts, or Charitable Uſes, and all proceed-'ings thereupon had in England ſince the Firſt of 'May, 1642. were Confirm'd, notwithſtand-'ing any defect of Legal Power, or difference in 'Style or Title.

2. 'All Fines Levied without paying the Kings 'Silver, or without entry of Money given for 'the Concord, or before one Judge only, were 'made good and effectual; And all Fines, Re-'coveries, Judicial Proceedings in the Common-'Pleas, ſince the death of the late King, of Lands 'in Demeſne, were Confirm'd.

3. 'Whereas ſince the Firſt of May, 1641. 'and before the 20th of Auguſt, 1660. divers 'who had adhered to both Houſes of Parliament, 'had been Indicted for Treaſon, and others alſo 'who adhered to his Majeſty or his Father, were 'impeached in like manner: All ſuch Indictments 'and Proceedings thereupon, and Grants made 'of any Lands forfeited by reaſon thereof, and 'Title to the mean profits claymed in that 'reſpect were henceforth diſcharged, and reſti-'tution to be made to the reſpective perſons and 'their heirs.

4. 'All Recognizances, Bonds, and Securities 'made to the late Keepers, or Protector, not 'pardoned or diſcharged, were to be proſecuted 'in the name and to the uſe of his Majeſty his 'Heirs and Succeſſors.

To the fourth Branch, ſuch Securities were excepted as had been given to the late Powers by any for their adherence to the King or his Father, or relating to the late Troubles, which was by this Act made void; as likewiſe were all Obligations, Bonds, and Securities by Order of any Council of State, Committee of Safety, Major General, Decimators, or any other Military Power.

5. 'After the 8th of May, 1660, no Judges 'at Weſtminſter, Sergeants at Law, Commiſ-'ſions of Sewers, or of Bankrupts, or of Charita-'ble Uſes, Conſtituted by any of the late Uſuped 'Powers, were to be continued.

6. 'No none claim upon or after any Fine by 'this Act confirmed, ſhall extend to barre any 'Perſon or their Heirs (other than the Parties to 'the ſaid Fines, and their Heirs and Truſtees) 'for ſuch Rights as they had by colour of any 'Act or pretended Ordinance of Parliament, 'ſince the firſt of May, 1642, and before the 1660. '25th of April, 1660, as of Crown-Lands, or 'of Church-Lands, or as the Lands of any perſon 'for adhering to the King, or his Father, or in 'relation to the late Troubles, ſo as ſuch perſons 'and their Heirs purſue their Clayms by Actions 'or Entry within 5. years after the 29th of 'May, 1660.

7. 'The Name and Styles of the Uſurped 'Power and Authorities were declared to be 'Rebellious.

8. 'All Proceedings of High Treaſon for Le-'vying War againſt Oliver Cromwell, or any 'other late Uſurped Power, were made void; as 'likewiſe all Aſſurances, Recognizances, and 'Judgments for Debt, or Damages heretofore 'had or ſuffered by any perſon whoſe Conviction, 'Outlawry, or Attainder, was by this Act diſ-'charged.

This Act of Confirmation was nevertheleſs not to extend to confirm any illegal proceedings of the late High Courts of Juſtice, nor to confirm any Sales or Eſtates made by any pretended Act of Parliament ſince the firſt of May, 1642. nor to debar any perſon grieved, from having a Writ of Errour, or Bill of Review, in ſuch manner as formerly, Except ſuch Errours and defects as were not by this Act remedied.

The Act for Proviſion of Money to Pay off the Armies and Navy, was by Poll, and was a very great Tax, becauſe many orders of Men were included in it, which were not mentioned in any former Act of the like kind.

15. 'Hutchinſon and Laſſells, two others of 'the Judges, were made uncapable to execute 'any Place of Truſt, and Laſſells to pay to the 'King one Years value of his Eſtate. Which Favours were extended to them for Reaſons before expreſſed.

The Act for a Perpetual Anniverſary does Enact, 'That in all ſucceeding Ages, the 29th 'of May be Celebrated in every Church and 'Chappel for his Majesties Restauration.

'Chappel in England, and the Dominions thereof, by rendring Thanks to God for the King's 'Peaceable Restauration to the Actual Possession 'and Exercise of his Legal Authority over his 'Subjects. And all Ministers are to read the Act 'at Morning Prayer the Lords Day next before 'that Day, to give notice for the Observation 'thereof.

A time prefixt by his Majesty for the Adjournment of the present Parliament.

The King after the Passing these Acts, gave the Parliament notice, That on the 13th of September, he would have them to Adjourn to the Sixth of November following; whereupon they were very diligent to compleat some Bills under Consideration. That which was of most Importance for the Peace of the Kingdom, was a Bill for the speedy Disbanding the Army and Garrisons, which they were very earnest in. The King intended to have made it a Sessions by Prorogation; but upon application made to him, to shew the inconvenience thereof at that time, because of many Bills and other matters of great Concernment depending, which would thereby be vacated, he consented to an Adjournment.

The Parliament having taken notice of the King's Wants intimated in his last Speech at the Passing of the forementioned Acts, and provided for his Supply; In the next place they likewise took Care that the Army should be supplyed with Pay till they were Disbanded; Which was another of the Particulars of that Speech.

Twenty Two Acts more; 14 Private, and 8 Publique, Sign'd by his Majesty.

And now all things being ready for an Adjournment, the King on the 13th of September, which was the day appointed, came to the House of Lords, and there gave his Royall Assent to Fourteen Private, and Eight Publique Acts of Parliament.

The Private were.

1. An Act for the restoring the Marques of Hertford to the Dukedom of Somerset.

2. An Act for the necessary Maintenance of the Work of Draining the great Level of the Fenns.

3. An Act to restore the Earl of Inchequin all his Honours and Lands in Ireland.

4. An Act for to restore to William Marques of Newcastle, all his Estate whereof he was in possession the 20th of May 1642. or at any time since.

5. An Act for settling the Priory of Watton, and other Lands in Yorkshire belonging to the Earl of Winchelsea, in the hands of Trustees, to pay his Debts.

6. An Act for the restoring of Sir George Lane to the Mannors of Rachline and Lisdurff, and other Lands in Ireland.

7. An Act to restore Charles Lord Gerrard Baron of Brandon, to all his Estate whereof he was in possession the 20th of May 1642. or at any time since.

8. An Act for the restoring to the Lord Culpeper Baron of Thorsway, all the Estate whereof his Father was possessed on the 20. of May 1642. or at any time after, which have not been since sold or alienated by his said Father by Acts and Assurances to which himself was party and consenting.

9. An Act to enable Augustine and William Skinner to sell Lands for payment of Debts.

10. An Act for the Incorporating the Master and Wardens of Haberdashers, London, to be Governours of the Free-School and Alms-Houses in New-port in Shropshire, of the Foundation of William Adams, and for settling Lands on them for the Maintenance thereof, and other Charitable Uses. 1660.

11. An Act for enabling Sir George Booth Baronet, to make Leases and Sales of part of his Estate.

12. An Act for Regulating of the Trade of Bay-making in the Dutch Bay-Hall in Colchester.

13. The other Two private Bills were one of them to Naturalize Dorothea Helena Countess of Derby; Emelia Countess of Ossory; Margaret Lady Culpeper; And a Son and a Daughter of Katherine Stanhopp Countess of Chesterfield, by John Kirkhoven Lord of Henflet in Holland.

14. And the other for Naturallizing Peter de la Pierre alias Peters, and John de la Pierre alias Peters.

Of these Acts, we think it unnecessary to name more than the Titles, as being not of Publique Concernment: and every of the Titles are not here exactly inserted, it being sufficient for Publique Use, to describe so much of them as may inform Posterity of their tendency, and that such Acts were then passed; whereby those that are concerned, may be directed to a more curious search.

The Publique ACTS were,

1. An Act for the speedy Disbanding of the Army and Garrisons.

The Title of this Act does so much expres the Use of it, that We shall omit to mention more of it here; and the rather, because it was in a few Months fully Executed.

2. An Act for the supplying and explaining certain defects in an Act for the speedy Provision of Money for Disbanding and Paying off the Forces of this Kingdom both by Sea and Land.

We have already given you an abbreviation of that Act, whereof this last is Explanatory, (which was the Poll-Bill lately described) and to which this being only relating in reference to the supply of some of its defects, We shall not deed to enlarge thereon.

3. An Act for raising Sevenscore Thousand Pounds for the compleat Disbanding of the Army.

The Parliament finding the Poll-Bill to rise much short of expectation, from the failure of a due an Exact execution of it; They passed this Act, which ordained the Money to be raised in Two Months from the First of November 1660. (viz.) 70000 l. per Mensem.

4. An Act for the speedy raising of 70000 l. for the present supply of his Majesty.

This Money was to be paid in one Month from the 29th of September following.

5. An Act to prevent Frauds and Concealments of his Majesties Customs and Subsidies.

This Act was but to continue in force till the end of the first Session of the next Parliament.

6. An Act for the Confirming and restoring of Ministers.

This Act stopt the Clamours of many Ecclesiastical persons that had defective Titles to their Cures; and the goodness of the King was very much celebrated by his Consent to it. Wherefore

1660. An Act for Confirming and restoring of Ministers.

fore it will not be amiss to give a brief touch of the Heads thereof.

It Enacts, That every Ecclesiastical person or Minister Ordained by any Ecclesiastical persons before December the 25th last past, being 24 years of age, having not renounced his Ordination, who hath been since January the first, 1642. placed in, and in Actual possession of any Ecclesiastical Benefice, with Cure of Souls, in England, Wales, or Berwick upon Tweed, which hath been void by death, or any other avoidance, since that time, and before the 25th of December last past, and was then in possession, and received the Profits being in the Kings gift, or of his Father, or of any Arch-Bishop, Bishop, Dean and Chapter, Prebend, Arch-Deacon, Body Politique or Corporate, or other person, other than such hereby restored, is declared lawful Incumbent.

Every voluntary Resignation of a Benefice to the Patron or any pretended Power since the said first day of January, to be good, as if made to the Competent Ordinary.

No Presentation is to be construed to be an Usurpation in Law, to the prejudice of any that shall have right to Present.

Every Ecclesiastical person formerly Sequestred or Ejected after lawful Presentation and perception of the profits, that hath not subscribed any Petition to bring the late King to Tryall, or by any act endeavoured or justified the Murther of the said King, or declared his Judgment against Infant-Baptism, by Preaching, Writing, Printing, or constant refusal to Baptize, shall be restored to the possession thereof, at or before the 25th day of December next ensuing; and every Ecclesiastical person to be removed, may enjoy the Profits to that day.

There be many other Clauses and Provisions in this Bill, too long to be here inserted; and so much the less important, in regard by some subsequent Lawes, the greatest part of the whole was in a manner repeal'd.

The Substance of the Act for Incouraging of Navigation.

7. An Act for Encouraging Shipping and Navigation: Wherein it is Enacted, That from the First of December 1660. no Commodities shall be Imported or Exported out of any Lands, Islands, Plantations or Territories, belonging unto, or which may belong to, his Majestie, his Heirs and Successors, in Asia, Africa, or America, in any other Vessel but such as belong unto the People of England, Ireland, Wales, or Berwick, or are of them built, or do belong to them as the right Owners, and whereof the Master and three fourths of the Mariners are English, under penalty of the loss of all the Goods Imported or Exported in other Vessels, as also of the Vessels, with all its Guns, Furniture, Tackle, Ammunition and Apparel, one third to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors; one third to the Governour of such Lands, Islands, Plantations or Territories, in case the Ship or Goods be there seized, and the other third part unto him that shall seize, inform, or sue for the same in any Court of Record, by Bill, Information, Plaint or Action, wherein no Essoin, Protection, or Wager of Law shall be allowed. And all Captains, and Commanders at Sea, by Commission from the King or his Successors, are required to bring in all Ships and Vessels so offending, and deliver them into the Court of Admiralty to be proceeded against; and in case of Condemnation, One Moyety is to be divided to the Use of the Admiral and Commander, and their Companies, according to the Rules in Case of Prize, and the other to the King and his Successors. With many other Clauses and Provisoes tending much to the advancement of the English Manufacture.

8. The Eighth Publique Act was, An Act for enabling Souldiers of the Army to exercise Trades. A very grateful Law to many of the Inferiour Officers and Souldiers, and a good preparatory to their Disbanding; for many of them had been Apprentices, and, without some such Provision, might have been left without any way of subsistence, when Arms were out of their hands.

The King made a short Speech to both Houses of Parliament at the passing of these Bills, full of Sweetness, according to the affable temper of his Nature.

The Kings Speech to the House at the Passing of the said Bills.

He thanked them for their general Care of the Publique, and other Particular respects to him, in that for his Satisfaction they had made Provision to pay off the Army whilst they were Disbanding, thereby to prevent Free Quarter: Adding, That though he kindly accepted their Present of Money, he would not imploy any of it for the supply of his own occasions, till he should be assured the Publique had no need of it. He likewise took notice of the Bill concerning the Duke of Somerset, who, he said, had merited as much of the King his Father, and himself, as a Subject could do; and that he was none of those who think that Subjects by performing their Duties in any extraordinary manner, do not oblige their Princes to reward them in an extraordinary manner; Nevertheless, he said, it seemed to be of an extraordinary nature, and indeed we do not remember any President in Story of the like: But the King was pleas'd to add, That he hop'd no man would envy this Duke, because he had done what a good Master should do to such a Servant.

After which, his Majesty referr'd to the Chancellor to speak of many other things which he had to Recommend to them: For in this time of their Recess, the Army was to be Disbanding, whereof many Discourses had been spread abroad by disaffected persons. Some said the King would keep them up; And others, That they would not suffer themselves to be disbanded. And though he had pass'd an ACT to Confirm Ministers, yet farther order was to be taken in reference to Church-Government; and particularly in respect to tender Consciences: as likewise about Purchases and Sales of Publique Lands, which had without any issue much taken up the time of both Houses; and therefore since the Parliament Adjourned before any thing in these Affairs was effected, it was expedient to satisfie the People with the Kings Intentions therein: Of which, and many other Matters of great Concernment to the Good and Quiet of the Kingdome, the Chancellor in a most Excellent Speech expressed himself as followeth.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

My Lord Chancellour's Speech to the Two Houses.

'THE King tells you, He hath Commanded 'me to say many Particulars to You: and 'the truth is, he hath charg'd me with so many, that

'that I have great reaſon to fear, that I ſhall ſtand 'in much need of his Mercy, for omitting many 'things he hath given me in Command, at leaſt, 'for delivering them in more diſorder and con-'fuſion, than matters of ſuch Moment and Im-'portance ought to be to ſuch an Aſſembly, for 'which the King himſelf hath even a kind of Re-'verence, as well as an extraordinary Kindneſs.

'I am to mention ſome things he hath done al-'ready, and many things he intends to do during 'this Receſs, that you may ſee how well content 'ſoever he is, that you ſhould have Eaſe, and 'Pleaſure, and Refreſhment, he hath deſigned 'Work enough for himſelf.

'The King hath thanked you for the Proviſion 'you have made, that there may be no Free-'Quarter during the time the Army ſhall be Diſ-'banding; and hath told you what he will do 'with that Money you have given him, if there 'ſhould want wherewith to disband it: And now 'I hope you will all believe that his Majeſty will 'conſent to the Disbanding. He will do ſo; And 'yet he doth not take it unkindly at their hands, 'who have thought that his Majeſty would not 'disband this Army. It was a ſober and rational 'Jealouſie; No other Prince in Europe would 'be willing to Disband ſuch an Army: An Army 'to which Victory is entayled, and which, hu-'manly ſpeaking, could hardly fail of Conqueſt 'whereſoever he ſhould lead it: And if GOD 'had not reſtored his Majeſty to that rare felici-'ty, as to be without apprehenſion of danger at 'home or from abroad, and without an ambition 'of taking from his Neighbours what they are 'poſſeſſed of, Himſelf would never disband this 'Army: An Army whoſe Order and Diſcipline, 'whoſe Sobriety and Manners, whoſe Courage 'and Succeſs, hath made it Famous and Terrible 'over the whole World: An Army of which 'the King and his Two Royal Brothers may 'ſay, as the Noble Grecian ſaid of Æneas,

——— Stetimus tela aſpera contra
Contulimuſque manus; experto credite, quantus
In Clypeum aſſurgat, quo turbine torqueat haſtam.

'They have all Three, in ſeveral Countries, found 'themſelves engaged in the midſt of theſe Troops, 'in the heat and rage of Battle; and if any Com-'mon Souldier (as no doubt many may) will 'demand the old Romans Priviledge for having 'encountred Princes ſingle, upon my Conſcience 'he will find both Favour and Preferment. They 'have all Three obſerv'd the Diſcipline, and felt 'and admired and loved the Courage of this Ar-'my, when they were the worſe for it; And I 'have ſeen them in a ſeaſon when there was little 'elſe of Comfort in their view, refreſh them-'ſelves with Joy that the Engliſh had done the 'great Work, the Engliſh had got the day; and 'then pleaſe themſelves with the Imagination 'what Wonders they ſhould perform in the Head 'of ſuch an Army.

'And therefore when his Majeſty is ſo entirely 'poſſeſſed of the Affection and Obedience of this 'Army, and when it hath merited ſo much from 'him, can it be believ'd or imagined, that he can 'without ſome regret part with them? No; My 'Lords and Gentlemen, he will never part with 'them, and the only way never to part with 'them', is to Disband them: Should it be other-'wiſe, they muſt be expoſed to the daily Impor-'tunity of his great Neighbours and Allies; and 'how could he refuſe to lend them his Troops, 'of which he hath no need himſelf? His Majeſty 'knows they are too good Engliſhmen, to wiſh 'that a ſtanding Army ſhould be kept up in the 'Bowels of their own Country, that they who 'did but in Bello Pacis gerere Negotium, and 'who, whil'ſt an Army liv'd like good Husband-'men in the Country, and good Citizens in the 'City, will now become really ſuch, and take 'delight in the benefit of that Peace they have ſo 'honeſtly and ſo wonderfully brought to paſs. 'The King will part with them as the moſt indul-'gent Parents part with their Children for their 'Education; and for their Preferment; he will 'prefer them to Disbanding, and prefer them by 'Disbanding; and will alwayes retain ſuch a 'Kindneſs for them, and ſuch a memory of the 'Service they have done him, that both Officers 'and Souldiers, after they are disbanded, ſhall 'alwayes find ſuch Countenance, Favour, and 'Reward from his Majeſty, that he doubts not, 'but if he ſhould have occaſion to uſe their Ser-'vice, they will again reſort to him with the 'ſame alacrity, as if they had never been Diſ-'banded: And if there be any ſo ill amongſt 'them (as there can be but very few, if any) 'who will forfeit the Favour and Protection they 'may have from him, by any withſtanding his 'Majeſties Commands, and the full and declared 'Senſe of the Kingdome, his Majeſty is Confi-'dent they will be as odious to their Compa-'nions, as they can be to any other honeſt men.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I am in the next 'place by the King's Command, to put you in 'mind of the Act of Indempnity, not of any 'Grants or Conceſſions, or Releaſes he made 'to you in that Act; I have nothing of that in 'Charge: No Prince hath ſo excellent a me-'mory to forget the Favours he doth; But of 'what he hath done againſt you in that Act, 'how you may be undone by that Act, if 'you are not very careful to perform the Obli-'gations he hath laid upon you in it: The Clauſe 'I am to put you in mind of is this; And to the 'intent and purpoſe that all names and tearms of 'diſtinction may likewiſe be put into utter Obli-'vion; Be it further Enacted by the Authority 'aforeſaid, That if any perſon or perſons within 'the ſpace of Three Years next enſuing, ſhall pre-'ſume maliciouſly to call, or alledg, or object, againſt 'any other perſons, any name or names, or other 'words of reproach, any way leading to revive the 'memory of the late differences, or the occaſion 'thereof, that then every ſuch perſon ſo, as afore-'ſaid, offending, ſhall forfeit, &c. It is no mat-'ter for the Penalty, it is too cheap a one, the 'King wiſhes it had been greater, and therefore 'hath by his Juſt Prerogative (and 'tis well for 'Us he hath ſuch a Prerogative) added another 'Penalty more inſupportable, even his high diſ-'pleaſure againſt all who ſhall ſwerve from this 'Clauſe in the Act: Give me leave to tell you, 'That as any name or names, or other words of 'reproach, are expreſly againſt the Letter, and 'puniſhable accordingly; ſo evil and envious 'Looks, murmuring and diſcontented hearts, 'are as directly againſt the Equity of this Sta-'tute, a direct breach of the Act of Indempnity

and

1660. 'and ought to be puniſhed too, and I believe they 'may be ſo. You know Kings are in ſome ſenſe 'called Gods, and ſo they may in ſome degree 'be able to look into mens hearts; and God hath 'given us a King, who can look as far into mens 'hearts as any Prince alive; and he hath great 'skill in Phiſiognomy too; you would wonder 'what Calculations he hath made from thence: 'and no doubt if he be provoked by evil Looks to 'make a further inquiry into mens hearts, and 'finds thoſe corrupted with the Paſſions of Envy 'and Uncharitableneſs, he will never chooſe thoſe 'hearts to truſt and rely upon. He hath given Us 'a Noble and Princely Example, by opening 'and ſtretching his Arms to all who are worthy 'to be his Subjects, worthy to be thought En-'gliſhman, by extending his Heart with a Pious 'and grateful Joy to find all his Subjects at once 'in his Arms, and himſelf in theirs; and ſhall 'We fold our Arms towards one another, and 'contract our hearts with Envy and Malice to each 'other, by any ſharp memory of what hath been 'unneighbourly or unkindly done heretofore? 'What is this but to Rebel againſt the Perſon of 'the King, againſt the excellent Example and 'Virtue of the King, againſt the known Law of 'the Land, this bleſſed Act of Oblivion?

'My Lords and Gentlemen, The King is a 'Suitor to you, makes his Suit very heartily, 'That you will Joyn with him in reſtoring the 'whole Nation to its Primitive temper, and In-'tegrity, to its old good Manners, its old good 'Humour, and its old good Nature; Good Na-'ture, a Virtue ſo peculiar to you, ſo appro-'priated by God Almighty to this Nation, that 'it can be Tranſlated into no other Language, 'hardly practis'd by any other People; And that 'you will by your Example, by the Candor of 'your Converſation, by your Precepts, and by 'your Practice, and by all your Intereſt, teach 'your Neighbours and your Friends, how to 'pay a full obedience to his Clauſe of the Statute, 'how to learn this Excellent Art of Forgetful-'neſs.

'Let them remember, and let Us all remember 'how ungracious, how indecent, how ugly the 'inſolence and fierceneſs, the brutiſhneſs of their 'Enemies appeared to them; and we may piou-'ſly and reaſonably believe, that Gods Indignati-'on againſt them, for their want of Bowells, 'for their not being Engliſhmen, (for they had 'the hearts of Pagans and Infidells) ſent a Whirl-'wind in a moment to blow them out of the 'World; that is, out of a Capacity to do more 'miſchief in the World; Except we practiſe their 'Vices, and do that our ſelves, which We pre-'tend to deteſt them for.

'Let us not be too much aſhamed, as if what 'hath been done amiſs, proceeded from the Hu-'mour, and the Temper, and the Nature of our 'Nation. The Aſtrologers have made Us a fair 'Excuſe, and truly I hope a true one, All the 'Motions of theſe laſt Twenty Years have been 'unnatural, and have proceeded from the Evil in-'fluence of a Malignant Star; And let Us not too 'much deſpiſe the Influence of the Stars. And the 'ſame Aſtrologers aſſure Us, That the Malignity 'of the Star is expired, the good Genius of this 'Kingdom is become Superiour, and hath maſter-'ed that Malignity; and our own good old Stars 'govern us again; and their influence is ſo ſtrong, 'that with our help they will repair in a year 'what hath been decaying in Twenty: And they 'only ſhall have no excuſe from the Star, who 'continue this Malignity, and own all the ill that 'is paſt to be their own, by continuing it, and 'improving it for time to come.

'If any body here, or any where elſe, be too 'much exalted with what he hath done, or what 'he hath ſuffered, and from thence thinks him-'ſelf Warranted to reproach others, let him re-'member the Story of Nicephorus; it is an ex-'cellent Story, and very applicable to ſuch di-'ſtempers; He was a Pious and Religious man, 'and for his Piety and Religion was Condemned 'to the Fire; When he was led to Execution, 'and when an old Friend who had done him in-'jury enough, fell at his feet and asked his par-'don, the Poor man was ſo elated with the 'Triumph he was going unto, with the Glory 'of Martyrdom, that he refuſed to be reconcil-'ed unto him; upon which he was diſappointed 'of his end; and for his Uncharitableneſs, the 'Spirit of God immediately forſook him, and he 'apoſtatized from the Faith.

'Let all thoſe who are too proud of having 'been, as they think, leſs faulty than other men, 'and ſo are unwilling to be reconciled to thoſe 'who have offended them, take heed of the A-'poſtacy of Nicephorus, and that thoſe fumes of 'Envy and Uncharitableneſs, and Murmuring, 'do not ſo far tranſport and intoxicate them, that 'they fall into thoſe very Crimes, they value 'themſelves for having hitherto declined.

'But, my Lords and Gentlemen, whileſt we 'conſpire together to execute faithfully this part 'of the Bill, to put all old Names and Tearms 'of diſtinction into utter Oblivion, let Us not 'find new Names and Tearms to keep up the 'ſame, or a worſe diſtinction: If the old re-'proaches of Cavalier, and Round-head, and Ma-'lignant, be committed to the grave, let Us not 'find more ſignificant and better words, to ſig-'nifie worſe things; let not Piety and Godlineſs 'grow into tearms of reproach, and diſtinguiſh 'between the Court, and the City, and the 'Country; and let not Piety and Godlineſs be 'meaſured by a moroſity in manners.

'An affectation of Geſture, a new mode and 'tone of ſpeaking, at leaſt, let not our Conſti-'tutions and Complexions make Us be thought 'of a contrary party, and becauſe we have not an 'affected auſterity in our looks, that we have no 'piety in our hearts; very merry men have been 'very godly men; and if a good Conſcience be a 'continual Feaſt, there is no reaſon but men may 'be merry at it.

'You Mr. Speaker have this day made a Noble 'Preſent to the King; do you think, that if you 'and your worthy Companions, had brought it 'up with folded Arms, down-caſt looks, with 'ſighs and other inſtances of deſparation, it would 'not have been a very Melancholick Preſent? 'Have not your Frank and Dutiful expreſſions, 'that chearfulneſs and vivacity in your looks, 'render'd it much more acceptable, much more 'valuable?

'No Prince in Chriſtendom loves a chearful 'giver ſo well as God Almighty does, and he 'of all gifts a Chearful heart, and therefore I pray

'pray let not a cloudy or diſcontented face be 'the only or the beſt ſign of Piety and Devition 'in the heart.

'I muſt ask you pardon for miſplacing much of 'this Diſcourſe, which I ſhould have mentioned 'when I came to ſpeak of the Miniſters Bill; 'They, I hope, will endeavour to remove thoſe 'new marks of diſtinction and Reproaches, and 'keep their Auditors from being impoſed upon 'by ſuch Characters and deſcriptions. The King 'hath paſſed this Act very willingly, and done 'much to the end of this Act before, yet hath 'willingly admitted you to be Sharers and Part-'ners with him in the Obligation: I may ſay 'confidently, his Majeſty hath never denyed his 'Confirmation to any man in poſſeſſion who 'hath asked it; and they have all had the effect 'of it, except ſuch who, upon examination and 'inquiry, appeared not worthy of it, and ſuch 'who, though they are Pardoned, cannot yet 'think themſelves worthy to be preferr'd. His 'Majeſty well knows, that by this Act he 'hath gratified and obliged many worthy and 'Pious men who have contributed much to his 'Reſtauration, and who ſhall alwayes receive 'freſh evidences of his Majeſties Favour and 'Kindneſs; but he is not ſure that he may like-'wiſe have gratified ſome who did neither con-'tribute to his coming in, nor are yet glad he is 'in; how comes it elſe to paſs, that he receives 'ſuch frequent Information of Seditious Ser-'mons in the City and in the Country, in which 'all Induſtry is uſed to alienate the affections of 'the People, and to infuſe Jealouſies into them 'of the King and his Government, they talk of 'introducing Popery, of Evil Counſellours, and 'ſuch other old Calumnies as are pardoned by 'this Act of Indempnity.

'His Majeſty told you, when he was laſt 'here, That Rigour and Severity he will here-'after uſe, how contrary ſoever it is to his Na-'ture in theſe caſes, and conjured you, My 'Lords and Gentlemen, to concurre with him in 'this Juſt and Neceſſary Severity; which I am 'ſure you will do with your utmoſt Vigilance; 'and that you will believe that too much ill 'cannot befall thoſe who do the beſt they can to 'corrupt his Majeſtie's Nature, and to extinguiſh 'his Mercy.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I told you I was 'to acquaint you with ſome things his Majeſty 'intends to do during this Receſs, that you may 'ſee he will give no intermiſſion to his own 'Thoughts for the Publique good, though for a 'time he diſpences with your aſſiſtance.

'He doth conſider the infinite importance the 'improvement of Trade muſt be to this Kingdom, 'and therefore his Majeſty intends to eſtabliſh a 'Council for Trade, conſiſting of ſome Princi-'pal Merchants of the ſeveral Companies, to 'which he will add ſome Gentlemen of Quality 'and Experience: And for their greater Honour 'and Encouragement, ſome of my Lords of his 'own Privy Council.

'In the next place, his Majeſty hopes, that by 'a well ſettled Peace, and God's great Bleſſing 'upon him and You, this Nation will in a ſhort 'time flouriſh to that degree that the Land of 'Canaan did, when Eſau found it neceſſary to 'part from his Brother, For their Riches were 'more than that they might dwell together, and 'the Land wherein they were could not bear 'them, becauſe of their Cattel. We have been our 'ſelves very near this Pinacle of Happineſs; 'and the hope and contemplation that we may 'be ſo again, diſpoſes the King to be very ſol-'licitious for the Improvement and Proſperity 'of his Plantations abroad, where there is ſuch 'large room for the Induſtry and Reception of 'ſuch who ſhall deſire to go thither. And there-'fore his Majeſty intends likewiſe to Erect and 'Eſtabliſh a Council for thoſe Plantations in 'which perſons well qualified, ſhall be wholly 'intent upon the good and advancement of thoſe 'Plantations. 1660.

'There are two other Particulars which I am 'commanded to mention, which were both men-'tioned and recommended to You by his Majeſty 'in his Declaration from Breda: The one, for 'the confirmation of Sales, or other recompence 'for Purchaſers: The other, for the Compoſing 'thoſe differences and diſtempers in Religion 'which have too much diſturbed the Peace of the 'Kingdom. Two very weighty Particulars, in 'which his Majeſty knows you have ſpent much 'time, and concerning which he ſhould have 'heard from you before this time, if you had not 'met with great difficulties in the diſquiſition 'of either.

'For the Firſt, his Majeſty hath not been 'without much thought upon the Argument, and 'hath done much towards the accommodation 'of many particular perſons; and you ſhall not 'be at your Journeys end, before his Majeſty 'will put that buſineſs concerning Sales into ſuch 'a way of diſpatch, that he doubts not, you will 'find a good progreſs made in it before your 'coming together again; and I believe the perſons 'concerned will be very much to blame if they 'receive not good ſatisfaction: and ſome of you, 'who ſtay in Town, ſhall be adviſed and con-'ſulted with, in that Settlement.

'The other of Religion, is a ſad Argument 'indeed, it is a conſideration that muſt make every 'Religious heart to bleed, to ſee Religion, which 'ſhould be the ſtrongeſt Obligation and Ciment 'of Affection, and Brotherly Kindneſs and Com-'paſſion, made now, by the perverſe wranglings of 'paſſionate and froward men, the ground of all 'Animoſity, hatred, malice and Revenge. And 'this unruly and unmanly paſſion (which no 'Queſtion the Divine Nature exceedingly ab-'horrs) ſometimes, and I fear too frequently, 'tranſports thoſe who are in the right, as well as 'thoſe who are in the wrong, and leaves the 'latter more excuſable than the former, when 'men, who find their Manners and Diſpoſitions 'very conformable in all the neceſſary obliga-'tions of humane Nature, avoid one anothers con-'verſation, and grow firſt unſociable, and then 'uncharitable to each other, becauſe one cannot 'think as the other doth; And from this ſepa-'ration We entitle God to the Patronage of, and 'concernment in, our fancies and diſtinction, and 'purely for his ſake hate one another heartily.

'It was not ſo of old, when one of the moſt 'Ancient Fathers of the Chuch tells Us, That 'Love and Charity was ſo ſignal and eminent 'in the Primitive Chriſtians, that it even drew 'admiration and envy from their adverſaries.

1660. 'Vide (inquiunt) ut invicem se diligunt! Their 'Adversaires, in that in which they most agreed 'in their very prosecution of them, had their pas- 'sions and animosities amongst themselves; they 'were only Christians that Loved, and Che- 'rished, and Comforted, and were ready to die 'for one another. Quid nunc illi Dicerent Chri- 'stiani, si nostra viderent tempora? sayes the In- 'comparable Grotius; How would they look 'upon our sharp and virulent Contentions in the 'Debates of Christian Religion, and the bloody 'Warrs that have proceeded from those Conten- 'tions, whilest every one pretended to all the 'marks which are to attend upon the true Church 'except only that which is inseparable from it, 'Charity to one another.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, this Disquisition 'hath cost the King many a Sigh, many a sad 'hour, when he hath considered the almost ir- 'reparable reproach the Protestant Religion hath 'undergone from the Divisions and Distractions 'which have been so notorious within this King- 'dom; What pains he hath taken to compose 'them, after several Discourses with Learned and 'Pious men of different perswasions, you will 'shortly see by a Declaration he will publish upon 'that occasion; by which you will see his great 'indulgence, to those who can have any Pro- 'tection from Conscience to differ with their 'Brethren. And I hope God will so bless the Can- 'dor of his Majesty in the Condescentions he 'makes, that the Church as well as the State will 'return to that Unity aud Unanimity, which 'will make both King and People as happy as they 'can hope to be in this World.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I shall conclude 'with the King's hearty Thanks to you, not only 'for what you have done towards him, which 'hath been very Signal; but for what you have 'done towards each other; for the Excellent 'Correspondence you have maintain'd, for the 'very seasonable difference and condescention 'you have had for each other, which will restore 'Parliaments to the veneration they ought to 'have. And since his Majesty knows that you all 'desire to please him, you have given him ample 'evidence that you do so. He hath appointed me 'to give you a sure receipt to attain that good 'end; it is a Receipt of his own prescribing, and 'therefore it is not like to fail.

'Be but pleased your selves, and perswade 'others to be so; contrive all the wayes imagi- 'nable for your own Happiness, and you will 'make Him the best pleased and the most happy 'Prince in the World.

After this Speech the King retired, and both Houses of Parliament Adjourned themselves to the Sixth of November.

In the ACT for the speedy Disbanding of the Army and Garrisons, That Affair was committed to Twelve Commissioners, (Six whereof were Lords, and Six Commons) or to any Three of them, whereof one of the Commissioners named by the Lords, and one named by the Commons, were to be Two: And that they might not go far about for the Money, The Treasurers at Warr, and Treasurer named in the Act for the speedy Provision of Money for for Disbanding the Army, were to Issue Moneys upon their Warrant.

All the Regiments and Garrisons were Disbanded by Lott, except Four Companies in Hull, four in Berwick, and four in Carlisle, which were reserved to be last reduced: And the Regiments belonging to the Dukes of York and Glocester, and the Lord General, were not to be Disbanded till after all the other Regiments and Garrisons, except the Three before mentioned. There were Disbanded in England and Wales, Eighteen Regiments of Foot, consisting of a Thousand Souldiers in each Regiment, besides Officers, and thirteen Regiments of Horse, having six hundred Souldiers in each Regiment besides Officers, together with the General's Life-Guard of Horse, consisting of Two Hundred, and about Fifty Garrisons which had not in them less than 5000 Souldiers, besides Officers. And in Scotland Three Regiments and Two Companies of Foot, and Two Regiments, except one Troop of Horse, and about Thirteen Garrisons; but most of these Garrisons were not under particular Establishment, as those in England, but were mann'd by Companies out of the respective Regiments. The King, out of his own Bounty, gave a Weeks Pay over and above their full Arrears to all the Troops and Companies disbanded; Which was very Thankfully accepted by them.

Moreover, he was so well satisfied with the Services of many of his Subjects in Ireland, who Joyned with the Duke of Albemarle for his Restauration, that he Conferred Rewards and Honour upon many of them according to the report of their merit; amongst these, Sir Charles Coot was made Earl of Montrath; Roger Lord Broghill advanced to the Dignity of Earl of Orery; Collonel Richard Coot, a Brother to the Earl of Montrath, was created Baron of Collowney: and Sir John King, Baron of Kingston; and shortly after, Sir John Clotworthy was made Viscount Massarine.

The KING complemented by the Embassadours and Agents of Forrain Princes.

Besides the many Addresses that were made to the King by his own Subjects generally from all parts of his Dominions, there also came over Forrain Agents and Embassadours from several of the greatest Princes and States of Europe, to Complement his Majesty in the Name of their Masters, touching his happy Restauration to his Royal Dignity and Governmenr: From the Marques of Brandenburg came the Baron of Peluitz, Master of the Horse to his Highness. From Frederick Prince Palatine of the Rhine, Cozen-German to his Majesty of England, came Christopher Closs of Keiembergh, Captain of his Guards. From the King of Denmark came the Lord Frederick van Alefeld, Deputy-Governour of the Dukedoms of Sleswick and Holstein. But never did any Embassadour arrive in England in a more Splendid and gallant Equipage than the Prince of Ligne, who being sent Embassadour to our King from the King of Spain, seems to have come only upon a Gratulatory and Complemental Address, in regard there needed no Negotiation about any Peace between England and Spain, forasmuch as upon the coming in of his present Majesty, there follow'd by consequence a reviving of that Peaceful and Friendly Correspondence which had formerly been between these Two Crowns Crowns in the time of the late King. And to this purpose his Majesty set forth a Proclamation, Requiring that (whereas the King of Spain had Commanded throughout his Dominions a Cessation from all Hostility towards this Crown, and had propos'd, that the Publication thereof might be on both sides agreed on by a fixt day) all Acts of Hostility should likewise cease on our parts, toward the Subjects of that Crown; which Cessation was to be reckoned as taking beginning from the day of his Majestie's Arrival in England, being the 25th of May, and that all Goods and Merchandizes which had been taken from that time, should be restored.

Peace renew'd with Spain.

As the occasion of the Prince de Ligne's coming over was only Gratulatory and Complementall, so his stay here was but short; and after his Departure, there remain'd here as the King of Spain's Lieger or Embassadour in Ordinary, the Baron of Battevill. In the same manner? on the part of the French was the Count of Soissons, succeeded by Monsieur d'Estrade, who had not been long here, e're an Occasion hapned, which manifested, that the late concluded Peace between these two Kings had not any whit lessen'd the Jealousie of Honour between them and their old pretensions in point of Precedence: Many troublesome Contests there have formerly been between the Embassadours of these Two Crowns in the Courts of Forrain Princes and States, when they have chanc'd to be Resident together at the same place; but none more remarkable than that upon Tower-Hill, at the Landing of an Embassadour from Sweden, on the 30th of September: Which since it was so prepar'd and premeditated a Business on both sides, that his Majesty foreseeing it would come to a Quarrel, and out of his accustom'd Civility willing to carry himself with an equal and impartial Indifference toward them both, and so far to gratifie their Intentions, as to permit them to put their Retinue into such a posture as they should think fittest, and most becomming their respective Pretences: Yet in the mean time taking order for strict Guards to be kept upon the place, for the preventing, as much as might be, of all disturbances; and severely prohibiting any of his own Subjects to intermeddle in the difference, or to take part with either side; was pleas'd to Command, That the formerly mention'd Mr. Evelyn should, after diligent Enquiry made concerning the Carriage and Success of that whole Affair, render him a particular Accompt thereof, by drawing up a full Narrative of every Circumstance of that Rencountre: Which being a matter of so rare a kind, and great Importance, We have here thought meet to insert from that Gentleman's more sedulous and ample Collection, as it was by him presented to his Majesty in this following relation:

The manner of the Encounter between the French and Spanish Embassadours, at the Landing of the Swedish Embassadour.

Upon Monday last, being the 30th of September, about ten in the Morning, the Spanish Embassadours Coach (in which were his Chaplain, with some of his Gentlemen attended by about Fourty more of his own Servants in Liveries) was sent down to the Tower-Wharf, and there plac'd it self near about the Point, where the Ranks of Ordinance determine towards the Gate leading into the Bulwark. Next after him came the Dutch, and (Twelve a Clok past) the Swedish Coach of Honour, disposing of themselves according to their places. About two hours after this (in company with his Majesties Coach-Royal) appear'd that of the French Ambassadours, wherein were Le Marquess de Strade, Son to the French Ambassadour, with several more of his Gentlemen, and, as might be computed, near an Hundred and fifty in Train, whereof above Fourty were Horsemen well appointed with Pistols, and (some of them) with Carabines, Musquetoons or Fuzies: In this Posture and Equipage stood they expecting upon the Wharf, and as near as might be, approaching to his Majesties Coach, which was opposite to the staires. About Three in the Afternoon, the Swedish Ambassadour being Landed, and receiv'd into his Majestie's Coach, (which mov'd leisurely before the rest, and was follow'd by that of the Swedes) The French Ambassadour's Coach endeavour'd to go the next, driving as close as possibly they could, and advancing their Party with their Swords drawn, to force the Spaniards from the Guard of their own Coach, which were also putting in for Precedency next the King's. His Majestie's Coach now past, the Spaniards (who held as yet their Rapiers undrawn in their hands) stepping nimbly on either side of the hind-most Wheels of their Master's Coach, drew their Weapons, and shouted, which caus'd the French Coach-horses to make a Pause: But, when they observ'd the advantage, which by this, the Spanish Ambassadour's Coach had gain'd, being now in file after the Swedes, they came up very near to the Spaniards, and at once, pouring in their shot upon them, together with their Foot (then got before their Coach) fell to it with their Swords; both which the Spaniards receiv'd, without removing one jott from their stations.

During this Demesle, (in which the French receiv'd some repulse, and were put to a second stand) a bold and dextrous Fellow, and (as most affirm) with a particular Instrument, as well as address, stooping under the bellies of the French Ambassadour's Coach-Horses, cut the ham-strings of two of them, and wounded a third; which immediately falling, the Coach for the present was disabled from advancing farther, the Coachman forced out of his Box, and the Postillion mortally wounded, who falling into the arms of an English Gentleman that stepped in to his succour, was by a Spaniard pierced through his Thigh. This disorder (wherein several were wounded, and some slain) caused those in the French to alight, and so enraged their Party, that it occasion'd a second brisk Assault both of Horse and Foot; which being receiv'd with extraordinary Gallantry, many of their Horse retreated, and wheel'd off to S. Katherines.

It was in this Skirmish that some Brick-batts were thrown from the edge of the Wharf, which (by a mistake) are said to have been provided by the Spanish Ambassadour's Order the day before: But that they were not cast by any of the English, is attested by the general consent of all the Spectators.

In this interim then (which was near half an hour) the Spanish Coach went forward after his Majestie's, with about Twenty of its Retinue following, who still kept their Countenances towards the French, as long as they abode on the 1660. Wharf and that narrow Paſſage of the Bullwark, (where the Conteſt was very fierce) without diſorder: So as the firſt which appear'd on Tower-Hill (where now they were entring) was his Majeſtie's Coach, follow'd by the Swedes Ambaſſadour's; and next, by that of Spain, with about Twenty Four or Thirty of his Liveries, ſtill diſputing it with a leſs number of French, who came after them in the Rear.

And here, (beſides what were ſlain with Bullets on the Wharf, and near the Bulwark, whereof one was a Valet de Chambre of the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour's, and ſix more, amongſt which a poor Engliſh Plaiſterer, and near fourty wounded) fell one of the French, who was kill'd juſt before his Highneſſe's Life-Guard; no one perſon of the numerous Spectators intermeddling, or, ſo much as making the leaſt noiſe, or tumult, People or Souldiers, whereof there were Three Companies of Foot, which ſtood oppoſite on the Hill to the Guards of Horſe, 'twixt whom the Antagoniſts lightly Skirmiſh'd, ſome freſh Parties of French coming out of ſeveral places, and protected by the Engliſh, amongſt whom they found ſhelter, till the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour's Coach having gain'd, and paſs'd the Chain which leads into Crochet-Friers, they deſiſted, and gave them over.

What ever diſadvantage the French came off with in this Rencounter, wherein, except one man that fought among the Spaniards with a Half Pike, not any of the Engliſh were ſeen to Act any thing that might contribute to the ſucceſs of one ſide more than another, till a few of the multitude which ſtood on that ſide of the Wharf, being enrag'd by the Wounds which they receiv'd from the ſhot that came in amongſt them, and whereof, 'tis ſaid, ſome of them afterwards died, were forc'd to defend themſelves with what they found at hand: For ſo Careful was Sir Charles Barcley, Captain of his Royal Highneſſe's Life-Guard, to put in execution what he had in ſtrict Charge from his Majeſty, that not a man of the Spectators was ſuffer'd with impunity ſo much as with a Switch in his hand. The French King, from this occaſion, gain'd an advantage to the Prerogative he ſtood upon, greater than if this Conteſt had not hapned; For whereas this buſineſs of Precedence had been hitherto in Controverſie between him and Spain, in ſo much that to prevent all Inconveniencies, an Accord had been lately made here between the Spaniſh Embaſſadour and the Count of Soiſſons, That they ſhould aſſiſt at no Publick Ceremonies, but upon all ſuch caſual Encounters, paſs on their way as they fortun'd to meet: The King of France countermanding this Agreement, and ſending poſitive Charge to de Strade, not to abate any thing of thoſe Pretenſions formerly ſtood upon; and hearing what enſued upon his Embaſſadour's executing of his Injunctions, was ſo Incenc'd thereat, that the Quarrel had proceeded to an abſolute Breach of the late concluded Peace between the two Kingdoms, had not the King of Spain condeſcended to agree, That thence-forward Precedence ſhould be yielded to the French upon all ſuch like occaſions, without any diſpute.

The Princeſs Royal comes over into England.

On the 23 of this Month, the Princeſs Royal of Great Brittain having recommended the Intereſts of her Son the Prince of Aurange to the care of the Lords States of the Netherlands, (who now at length had agreed among themſelves to admit this Young Prince to the ſame Dignity and Truſt which his Auncеſtours formerly held in that Commonwealth, of which they had ſo highly merited) came over into England, invited by his Majeſty, and willing once again to ſee her Native Country from which ſhe had ſo many years been abſent: But her Joy to ſee the King her Brother peaceably Inthron'd, was very much allay'd by her Sorrow for the loſs of her Third Brother, Henry of Oatlands Duke of Glouceſter, who in the 21 year of his age (to the great Grief of the King his Brother, and all thoſe that knowing and admiring the Princely Vertues of his Youth, had promis'd Wonders to the World from the hopes of his Elder age) departed this Life on the 13th of September, being the ſame day the Parliament adjourn'd, which was near the ſpace of four Month after his Arrival in England; ſo that he ſurvived little longer than juſt to attend upon his Brother to his Throne. He was a Prince Excellently accompliſh'd, Religious, Learned, Valiant, Wiſe above his Years, a Dutiful and Affectionate Brother, a Wiſe Councellour, a Good Maſter, and a True Friend. And as if Fate had ſo provided, that being himſelf of the moſt Noble, he ſhould alſo in death be accompany'd by the moſt Noble, there died much about the ſame time, two of the ſame Order with himſelf, and next him in Quality, Eſme Duke of Lenox, and Richmond, and William Marqueſs of Hertford, who was alſo not long before his death reſtored by his now Majeſty to the Ancient Dignity of his Anceſtours, being created Duke of Somerſett, and alſo to the Honour he had merited in the time of his late Majeſty, of being Lord Chancellour of the Univerſity of Oxford: In which laſt Dignity he is ſucceeded by Sir Edward Hide, Lord high Chancellour of England.

The Death of the Duke of Glouceſter.

Of the Dukes of Lenox and Somerſett.

Commiſſioners having been appointed by the Parliament to Pay off and Disband the Army and Navy, a ſpeedy and effectual Courſe having been by them taken, as hath been already mention'd, for the Paying off and Disbanding the ſeveral Regiments and Ships as faſt as Money came in by the Act of Poll-Money and the other Acts of Aſſeſsments made to that end by the Parliament before their Adjournment; In lieu of theſe Diſbanded Forces, all the ſeveral Counties of the Nation under the Conduct of certain Noblemen, who were conſtituted the King's Lieutenants over them, according to the Ancient Cuſtom, were Armed with their own Militia or Train'd Bands; Not ſo much in any apprehenſion of diſquiet from the Souldiers, for they had ſo good Officers placed over them by the Lord General, that there was no fear of diſorder from them; but leſt any ſeditious perſons might think themſelves capable of making diſturbance, if no Armed force ſhould be ready to prevent their Miſchiefs.

Commiſſioners appointed to Disband the Army and Navy.

The Militia ſettled in the ſeveral Counties.

And by this means, the Country was both ſettled into ſuch a Poſture of Military Defence, as to be able at a ſhort warning to appear in Arms, and alſo freed from the continual Charge of maintaining a ſtanding Army, whereof there would be no appearance, except in caſe of Emergent Danger.

As matters of Civil, ſo likewiſe thoſe of Eccleſiaſtical concernment were had in ſerious regard by his Majesty, who judging the Form of Church-Government which had been Establish'd in England from the time of the Reformation, till the late Troubles; to be the most Ancient and Decent way of Worship and Discipline, and most tending to Uniformity in Religion, made it one of his first businesses to restore the late extruded Episcopacy to the Dignity and Authority they formerly exercised in the Church of England; To which end, he speedily proceeded to the nomination of such Persons as were approv'd to be of the most eminent for Learning and Piety, for the supplying of those Bishop's See's, which were become vacant since the first time of the Abrogation of their power.

Episcopacy revived in England.

In the Moneth of October, Owen Rowe, Augustine Garland, and 27 more of the Regicides, Murderers of the late King, excepted out of the Act of Indempnity and Oblivion, were arraigned at the Old Baily upon a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, directed to Thomas Allen Knight and Baronet, Lord Mayor of London, Sir Edward Hide, Lord Chancellour of England.

The Earl of Southampton, the Duke of Somerset, the Duke of Albermarle, the Lord High Steward, the Earl of Lendsey, Earl of Manchester, Earl of Dorset, Earl of Barkshire, Earl of Sandwich, Lord Roberts, the Lord Finch, Denzel Holles, Esquire, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Knight and Baronet, Sir Charles Barkley, Knight; Mr. Secretary Nicholas, Mr. Secretary Morrice, Sir Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Arthur Annesley Esquire, Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Justice Foster, Mr. Justice Mallet, Mr. Justice Hide, Mr. Baron Atkins, Mr. Justice Twisden, Mr. Justice Terrell, Mr. Baron Turner, Sir Harbottle Grimstone Knight and Baronet, Sir William Wild Knight and Baronet, Recorder of London, Mr. Serjeant Brown, Mr. Serjeant Hale, John Howell Esquire.

The Prosecutors on behalf of his Majesty, were Sir Jeffery Palmer, his Majestie's Attorney General, Sir Heneage Finch, his Majestie's Sollicitor General, Sir Edward Turner, Attorney to his Highness the Duke of York, and Wadham Windham Esquire, Edward Shelton, Esquire attended the Clerk of the Crown.

The Prisoners being called, they all pleaded Not Guilty, Except Sir Hardress Waller, and Mr. George Fleetwood, who pleaded Guilty: But the Crimes were so odious, and the Proofs so clear, that the Jurors scarce ever went from the Barr to deliberate, but found them all Guilty; and Ten of them were Executed, viz. Harrison, Carew, Scott, Clement, Jones, Scroop, Cook, and Peters, at Charing-Cross; and Hacker and Axtell at Tyburn: William Hulet (who was also found Guilty, being accused to be one of those that in a Frock and Vizard assisted in the horrid Execution of the King, and therefore excepted from Pardon, though not by name) in regard that the Evidence seem'd not so clear to the Court, upon their report to the King, he had his Reprieve; and all the rest were respited, till the King and Parliament should order their Execution according to the direction in the Act of Indempnity in that behalf.

The King Summons a Parliament in Scotland.

The King thought it high time to settle the Peace of Scotland, as well as that of his other Dominions; and in order thereunto he summon'd a Parliament to meet at Edenburgh the 12th day of December; And by his Proclamation in that Kingdom, signified to all, That he relyed so much on the Loyalty, Prudence, and Care of his Parliament, as absolutely to commit to them the Trying and Judging of the Carriage of his Subjects during the late Troubles, concerning which he would receive Addresses and Informations only from his Parliament or Committee of Estate: To whom in the mean time he recommended the ordering and preparing of that affair, and to whom alone any of his People that were interessed, might freely and should only make their applications, assuring them, that his own Honour once vindicated, and the ancient Prerogatives of the Crown asserted, he would grant such a full and free Pardon, an Act of Indempnity, as might witness, that he desired nothing more than that his People should be settled with abundance of Happiness, Peace, and Plenty, under his Government.

For the Government of Ireland, he made Sir Maurice Eustace Knight, Lord Chancellour of Ireland, Roger Earl of Orrerey Lord President of Munster, and Charles Earl of Montraith, Lord President of Connought to be Justices, who Govern'd Affairs there with great Candor and Moderation.

New Officers Constituted in Ireland.

The Sitting again of the Parliament of England, drew very near, in the Interim whereof, the King, to manifest his vigilance for the good of his Subjects, according to his Promise at their Adjournment the latter end of October, published his Declaration concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs, fill'd with many gracious Concessions to allay the distempers in Religion of that time; which because it was but temporary, till the Parliament should Offer something further to him in reference to those matters, We forbear to mention the particulars thereof. He likewise a few dayes after emitted a Commission under the Great Seal of England, to several Persons of great Honour and Integrity, to Treat with all Purchasors of Crown and Church-Lands, that none of his People might want any satisfaction which in reason could be allowed them.

The King sets forth a Declaration concerning Ecclesiastical affairs.

The Two Houses of Parliament met the Sixth of November, and applied themselves to the making of several Laws for the augmentation of the King's Revenue, and other Matters of great Consideration, in which they were the more diligent and speedy, for that they received Intimation from the King, That he intended to Dissolve them on the 29th of December: In the mean time, They Ordered, That the several Bodies of Oliver Cromwell, John Bradshaw, Henry Ireton, and Thomas Pride, should be taken out of their Graves, and drawn on an Hurdle to Tyburn, to buried under the Gallows: And on Christmas-Eve, the King went to the House of Lords, and there gave his Royal Assent to Two Acts of Parliament; viz. To an Act for a Grant of certain Impositions upon Beer, Ale, and other Liquors, for the increase of his Majestie's Revenue, and, an Act for the taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Tenures in Capite, and by Knights Service, and Purveyance, and for settling a Revenue upon his Majestie's in Lieu thereof.

The Parliament meets again.

The Bodies of Cromwel, Bradshaw, Ireton, and Pride, Order'd to be buried under the Gallows.

The KING passes the Acts for settling of Excise, and taking away the Court of Wards.

The Act for a Grant of certain Impositions, &c. is by several Rates as Excise, upon Beer, Ale, Sider, Perry, Metheglin, Strong-Water or Aqua-

1660. Aqua Vitæ, Coffee, Chocolate, Sherber, and Tea; (viz.) for Beer, Ale, and such of these as are not Forraign Liquors, they are to be paid by the Brewer or other person that shall sell the same; And all Forreign Liquors, by the Merchant, or Importer in ready Money upon Entry, made before the Landing thereof; And these Impositions are to continue by this Law during the King's Life: But by another Statute made the same Session, For taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Tenures in Capite, and by Knights Service, and Purveyance, and for settling a Revenue upon his Majesty in lieu thereof: The said Impositions and Rates are in recompence thereof to be paid to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors for ever.

The Reasons alledged in this Statute, for taking away the Court of Wards, in the Preamble thereof, were, Because Tenures by Knights Service, either of the King or others, or by Knights service in Capite, or by Soccage in Capite of the King, and the Consequents upon the same had been much more burthensome, grievous, and prejudicial to the Kingdom, than beneficial to the King: And since the intermission of the said Court from the 24th of February, 1645. many persons had by Will and otherwise made disposal of their Lands held by Knights Service, whereupon divers Questions might arise, unless some seasonable Remedy should be taken to prevent the same, by taking away from the said 24th day of February, 1645. the Court of Wards and Liveries, and all Wardships, Liveries, Primer Seisins, and all Ouster le mains, Values, and Forfeitures of Marriages, by reason of any Tenure of the King, or of any other by Knight Service, and all mean Rates and Gifts, Grants or Charges, &c.

The Death of the Princess of Aurange.

Whil'st the King was passing these Two Acts, his Sister the Princess Mary, Princess of Aurange, died at White-Hall, A Lady of admirable Virtues and all Princely Endowments; and Five dayes after (viz.) on the 29th day of December in the Evening (which was the day of the Dissolution of the Parliament) was buried in King Henry the Seventh's Chappel at Westminster.

The Parliament dissolv'd, and 32 Acts more pass'd by the King.

Upon which day in the Morning, the King came to the House of Peers, and gave the Royal Assent to Twenty Private, and Twelve Publique Acts of Parliament. The Private, were these following.

1. An Act for the Restoring of Henry Lord Arundel of Worder, to the possession of his Estate.

2. An Act for Restitution of Thomas Earl of Arundel, Surrey, and Norfolk, to the Title of Duke of Norfolk.

3. An Act to restore to Wentworth Earl of Roscomon in Ireland, all the Honours, Castles, Lordships, Lands and Tenements, whereof James Earl of Roscomon his great Grandfather, or James Earl of Roscomon his Father, were possessed.

4. An Act for the restoring of Sir George Hamilton to his Lands and Estate in Ireland.

5. An Act for Maintenance of the Vicar, for the time being, of the Vicaridge of Royston.

6. An Act for Enabling Sir William Wray to sell Lands for payment of his Debts, and raising of Portions for his younger Children.

7. An Act for Naturalizing of Gerrard Vanbenthuzen, Daniel Demetrius, and others.

8. An Act for the enabling of John Newton the Younger, and William Oakley, to make Sale of Lands for payment of Debts, and raising of Portions.

9. An Act for impowring the Master of the Rolls to make Leases for Years, in Order to new building the old Buildings belonging to the Rolls.

10. An Act for the Naturalization of John Boreel, Esq; eldest Son of Sir William Boreel Knight and Baronet.

The Kings Favour to this Gentleman, grounded upon ſo notable a foundation of merit, as is before related, did oblige the Parliament in this and many other occaſions, to ſhew their reſpect to him.

The Act for raiſing and eſtabliſhing a Poſt-Office, brought a Revenue of One and Twenty Thouſand 1660. Thouſand Pounds a Year to the Crown; which was an Improvement firſt made in the time of Cromwel's Uſurpation.

The Act for the better Ordering of the Selling of Wines by Retayl, was to Prohibit any from ſelling of Wines, but ſuch as ſhould be Licenc'd by the King's Agents; and from retailing mingled, corrupted or abuſed Wines: as alſo for Limiting and bringing down the Prices thereof.

The Act for the prohibiting the planting, ſeting or ſowing of Tobacco in England and Ireland, did under ſtrict penalties forbid the ſeting or planting any Tobacco in ſeed, plant, or otherwiſe, in England, Wales, the Iſland of Jerſey and Guernſey, and the Town of Berwick, except it be in any Phyſick-Garden of either of the Univerſities, or other private Garden for Phyſick or Surgery, ſo as the quantity ſo planted, exceed not one half of a Pole in any Place or Garden.

The Act for prohibiting the Exportation of Wooll, Wool-fells, Fullers-Earth, or any kind of Scowring Earth, was made to preſerve the Manufacture of Woollen Cloth in England, which was one of the Staple-Commodities of this Kingdom, and that which brought moſt Trade and Advantage of any to it, till of late years that the Hollander, French, and others of our Neighbours, by Exportation of our Materials, had almoſt gain'd all the Trade thereof from Us: And although theſe Materials, as Wool, Wool-fels, and Fullers-Earth, had been by former Laws prohibited to be Exported to any Forreign Parts, on pain of Forfeiture or other pecuniary Mulcts. Thoſe Laws could not prevent the offences, for they were frequently, by ſtealth, or connivance, Exported. Wherefore this Statute was thought fit to be made, for the re-inforcing of thoſe former Laws, and preventing the like abuſes for the future.

The Effect of his Majeſtie's, and the Lord Chancellour's Speech, at the Diſſolving of his Parliament.

After the King had given the Royal Aſſent to the before mentioned Acts, he made a Speech to both Houſes, full of gracious and pleaſing Expreſſions: and amongſt others, he ſaid, This Parliament ſhould be called to all Poſterity, The Healing and the Bleſſed Parliament. And that it ſhould be a Rule to his Actions and Councels to conſider; What is a Parliament like to think of this Action, or this Council? Adding, That he would Religiouſly himſelf obſerve the Act of Indempnity, and would exact the Obſervation of it from all others.

And after he had ended, The Lord Chancellour (according to the Cuſtome, for none ever in his Place had greater Eloquence) excellently ſet forth the Happineſs of the King and his People, which only ſtrove which ſhould expreſs more affection to each others to the Joy of all his good Subjects, and the Terrour of Evill Doers. And with this Speech he concluded the Parliament; for then it was diſſolved. And We may truly ſay, Never did King and Parliament in this Kingdom better agree; never was there any Parliament Aſſembled with greater Expectation, and ended with greater Satisfaction to all the People; Of which we may not improperly inſert in this place a Stanza, out of that excellent Ode upon the King's Reſtoration and Return, made by the moſt celebrated of our Engliſh Poets, Mr. Abraham Cowly, now living, a little before its Diſſolution; in the 18th Page, whereof is ſung this Paſſage,

And ill ſhould We deſerve this Happy Day,
If no acknowledgment we pay
To You Great Patriots of the Two
Moſt truly other Houſes now;
Who have redeem'd from Hatred and from Shame,
A Parliament's once Venerable Name;
And now the Title of a Houſe reſtore
To that which was but Slaughter-Houſe before:
If my advice, Ye Worthies, might be tane,
Within thoſe Reverend Places
Which now your Living Preſence graces,
Your Worthy Statues alwayes ſhould remain,
To keep alive your uſeful Memory,
And to your Succeſſors th' Example be
Of Truth, Religion, Reaſon, Loyalty:
For though a firmly ſettled Peace
May ſhortly make your Publique Labours ceaſe,
The greatful Nation, will with joy conſent,
That in this Sence, you ſhould be ſaid
(Though yet the Name ſounds with ſome dread)
To be the Long, the Endleſs Parliament.

The Inſurrection of Venner and his Fifth-Monarchy-men.

Of all the manifold Sects, and Separations, that ſprung up from the licence of the late War, and the Anarchy that reign'd from that time, till the time of his Majeſtie's Reſtoration, there were ſcarce any that dreaded not the Name of Monarchy, as apprehending the Conſequence thereof to be a tendency to Uniformity in Church and State; And therefore no marvail if they who heretofore were profeſs'd Enemies to the King and his Right of Government, were, after his Coming in, agitated with a reſtleſs ſpirit of Impatience and Diſ-ſatisfaction, which forbore not ſeveral times to manifeſt it ſelf in ſuch Attempts, as, had not a timely ſtop been put unto them, by the Prudent Foreſight and Vigilant Care of his Majeſty and his Council, might very much have Endanger'd the Imbroyling of the Nation in a new Civil War. The firſt Alarm that was given, was by the Fifth-Monarchy-men, (they at leaſt were the only hardy men that openly appear'd) a generation of people however ſo call'd, the moſt Inveterate Enemies to the Ancient ſettled Monarchy of the Nation, of all the whole Hydra; Of theſe about 50 or 60 mad perſons, reſolving to venture Neck or nothing, broke forth into open Hoſtility and Rebellion, under the Conduct of one Thomas Venner, a Cooper, that had lived for ſome time in New-England, and was of the principle of the Fifth-Monarchy, and a Preacher to a Conventicle of thoſe of that Opinion, who uſually met in Coleman-ſtreet. That which firſt gave him and his partakers a pretence to their Treaſon, was the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, (which all good Subjects are oblig'd by the Law to take) exclaiming not only againſt them in particular, but againſt all Oaths in general; And when ſome amongſt them, more Ingenious than the reſt, adviſed their Companions not to diſpute what was Commanded by their Superiours, ſince ſubjection was naturally due to thoſe Powers from whence they expected protection; They were anſwered by the Seditious, That they had no protection in the exerciſe of their Religion, but were for the practice thereof expoſed to all manner of Contempts and Miſeries. As if a Juſt Reſtraint from Extravagancies in Divine Worſhip, were to be eſteem'd Oppreſſion.

The

The madneſs of theſe Men extended ſo far, as to believe they and the reſt of their Judgment were called by GOD to Reform the World, and make all the Earthly Powers (which they called Babylon) ſubſervient to the Kingdom of King Jeſus; and in order thereunto, never to ſheath their Sword, till the carnal Powers of the World became a hiſſing and a Curſe: And by a miſguided Zeal, they were ſo confident in their undertaking, that they were taught and believ'd one ſhould ſubdue a Thouſand, making account when they had led captive Captivity in England, to go into France, Spain, Germany, and other parts of the World, there to proſecute their holy deſign.

The place where they conſulted and continued their Conſpiracy, was the Meeting-place for their Devotion, and thither they had at ſeveral times conveyed Arms. On Sunday the Sixth of January, which was the day before their Excurſion; (his Majeſty at that time being gone to accompany his Royal Mother the Queen-Dowager of Great Brittain, and his Siſter the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, part of their Journey toward France,) they were very late at their Aſſembly, which made one Martin, the Landlord of the Houſe, but not of their Party, ſomewhat inquiſitive after their doings; and as he was going into the Chamber to them, he met Venner, who ſeeing him troubled, told him, He perceiv'd he thought their ſtay too long, and that in half an hours ſpace after they had ſought God in their Prayers, they would diſperſe; Martin's jealouſie of their actions, made him Conſult with a Friend about their unuſual manner of Aſſembling, and he was adviſed to Liſten at their Door, or peep through ſome Chink to hear or ſee what they were about; Which he did, and found them Arming themſelves with Back, Breaſt, and Head-Piece; and thereupon he immediately gave Notice thereof to ſome of the next Officers: But within half an hour of this, they came down, and being met by the Miſtreſs of the Houſe great with Child, who in amazement would have ſhut the Door upon them, they offer'd to ſhoot her with a Muſquet; upon which in great terrour ſhe left them. The Rebels firſt march'd to St. Thomas Apoſtles, to call ſome of their party, and from thence to Biſhops-Gate, and after to White-Croſs-ſtreet. Sir Richard Brown, the Lord Mayor, having notice of their being abroad, got together ſome Files of the Trained Bands, but not ſufficient, as was ſuppoſed, to make any impreſſion upon them, they being imagin'd more numerous then they were; by which means they had opportunity to eſcape to St. Johns Wood, and from thence to Cane-Wood, betwixt High-Gate and Hampſtead.

By this time the Alarum being come to White-Hall, and the General's Regiment drawn up the Duke of York and he, with the Earl of Oxford, and ſome others; and ſome of the Guards, march'd into London, where they were informed all the Rebels were diſperſed, except a party of them that were ſeen to go towards Cane-Wood, whither Sir Thomas Sandys was ſent with ſome of the Guards, and a Company of Foot: But by the darkneſs of the Night they got away, and on Wedneſday morning came again into London, and divided themſelves into two Parties, one whereof about 5 and 6 in the morning appear'd about Leaden-Hall, and from thence march'd to Little Eaſtchap, where they fought obſtinately enough, but were diſperſed by the Train'd Bands. Venner and another Party came to my Lord Mayor's Houſe, thinking to have taken him Priſoner; but miſſing him, they march'd into Wood-ſtreet, where they were met by Colonel Corbet, and about twenty Horſe; Corbet and nine of his party charged through the Rebels, and broke them, whereby the Train'd Band Foot that ſeconded them, had little more to do, than to purſue them. They fought with courage to admiration: and if they had not been hindred by the care of the Lord Mayor from increaſing their numbers, a Thouſand men ſo reſolv'd, might have cauſed ſuch a diſturbance in the City, as might have had an influenee much further. Venner himſelf was very much wounded before he was taken, and about five or ſix kill'd that refuſed quarter, of which ſome of them were ſo obſcure, that their Names were not known. And about eight or ten days after, Venner with about ſixteen or ſeventeen of the moſt notorious, were arraigned at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Baily, found guilty, and executed in ſeveral parts of London. 1660.

Thus ended this deſperate Enterpriſe of a formidable Army of threeſcore men, who were inſenſated to that heighth of Enthuſiaſtick Valour, that they thought themſelves ſtrong enough to encounter the whole Armed force of one of the Greateſt and moſt Populous Cities of the World; The Princes Guards, the General's Troops, the City Train'd Bands, were all ſwallow'd up in Conceit, by theſe men of Mickle Might, and Little Wit; and I have heard ſay, they were ſo Infatuated with their golden Dreams, and ſo Cock-ſure of ſucceſs, that they had promis'd to themſelves the Partage of the whole Empire of the World among them; Thirty being deſign'd for the ſubduing of the Eaſtern Parts, and thirty of the Weſtern: But we have ſeen what diſaſter they met with by the Way.

With the Suppreſſion of this Inſurrection, and the bringing the Authours thereof to exemplary puniſhment, together with the deceaſe of Sir Arthur Haſlerigg in the Tower, who is thought to have died with very Anguiſh of Mind, to ſee all his great Deſigns in an Inſtant brought to nothing; and himſelf at the Mercy of a Power o're which he had ſo long Triumph'd: We ſhall conclude this Year, as with the Solemn Coronation of his Majeſty; our preſent Hiſtory not thinking it enough to have ſeen him reſtor'd to his Throne and rightful Inheritance, without ſeeing him alſo inveſted with thoſe Enſigns, and Formalities of Regal Dignity, by which all his Predeceſſours were confirm'd and eſtabliſh'd Kings of England.

The Pomps and Proceedings whereof, in regard they may very well be conceiv'd to have exceeded the Magnificences of all former Coronations, as being perform'd for a PRINCE ſo miraculouſly reſtor'd to his People, We judge not impertinent to be here Inſerted; following herein the Obſervations and Collection (according to the Original unmutilated Copy ſet forth by himſelf, and with his own Name prefix'd to the Title) of Elias Aſhmole Eſq; Windſor Herald at Arms; a moſt Judicious and Curious Inquirer into all Antiquities of this Nature, and exactly 1661. vers'd in the publick Ceremonies of State, especially in the Rites and Customs of the most Noble and Illustrious Order of the Garter: The Names and order of the Companions whereof, as they were settled in their Stalls the 16th of April, 1661. were as followeth:

1661. The Proceedings on the day of his MAJESTIE'S Coronation, were as followeth:

UPon Tueſday the 23d of April being St. George's day, about half an hour after ſeven in the morning, the King entred into His Rich Barge, took Water from the Privy-Stairs at White-Hall, and landed at the Parliament-Stairs: From whence He proceeded up to the Room behind the Lords-Houſe, called the Princes Lodgings, where, after He had repoſed Himſelf for a while, He was arrayed in His Royal Robes of Crimſon Velvet, furr'd with Ermine: By which time the Nobility, being aſſembled, robed themſelves in the Lords-Houſe, and Painted-Chamber.

The Judges alſo, with thoſe of the Long-Robe, the Knights of the Bath, and Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber, met in the Court of Requeſts.

After ſome ſpace, the Kings Heralds, and Purſuivants, began to ſet the Proceeding in Order, each of them taking his ſhare aſſigned in Chapter, (held at the Heralds-Office the evening before) and thence directed all the before-mentioned Degrees (except the Nobility) down into Weſtminſter-Hall, where the reſt of the Proceeding attended, and from whence the March began.

About half an hour after Nine, the Nobility (having been firſt called over in the Painted-Chamber) proceeded each according to his Rank, and Dignity, in their Robes, and Coronets, before the King, through the Court of Requeſts, into Weſtminſter-Hall, aſcended up to the State, which was raiſed at the Weſt-end, and placed themſelves upon each ſide thereof.

His Majeſty being ſet in his Chair, under a rich Cloth of State: Firſt, Sir Gilbert Talbot, the Maſter of the Jewel-Houſe, preſented the Sword of State, as alſo the Sword called Curtana, and two other Swords, to the Lord High-Conſtable, who took and delivered them to the Lord High-Chamberlain, and he (having drawn the laſt) laid them upon the Table before the King.

Then the ſaid Maſter of the Jewel-Houſe delivered likewiſe the Spurs to the Lord High-Conſtable; and he again the ſame to the Lord High-Chamberlain, who alſo placed them upon the Table.

Immediately after the Dean and Prebends of Weſtminſter, (by whom the Regalia had been brought in Proceſſion from the Abbey-Church unto Weſtminſter-Hall) being veſted in rich Copes, proceeded from the lower end thereof, in manner following:

The Serjeant of the Veſtry, in a Scarlet Mantle.
The Children of the King's Chappel, being twelve in number, in Scarlet Mantles.
The Quire of Weſtminſter in Surplices.
The Gentlemen of the King's Chappel, being thirty three in number, in Scarlet Mantles.
The Purſuivants, Heralds, and Provincial Kings.
The Dean, carrying St. Edward's Crown.
Doctour Helyn, the Scepter with the Croſs.
Doctour Heywood, the Scepter with the Dove.
Doctour Nicholas, the Orb with the Croſs.
Doctour Killegrew, King Edwards-Staff.
Doctour Jones, the Chalice, and Patena.
Doctour Dowty, the Spoon.
Doctour Busby, the Ampulla.

All ſtanding towards the lower end of the Hall, ready to proceed, they made their firſt Reverence together; then coming to the middle of the ſaid Hall, they there made a ſecond; and thence going a little further, both the Quires fell off, and ſtood on either ſide, through which Lane, the Purſuivants, Heraulds, and Kings paſſing, fell likewiſe off on either ſide, the Seniours ſtill placing themſelves uppermoſt towards the Throne: after whom, the Dean and Prebends proceeded, and arrived at the foot of the Stone-ſteps, aſcending to the Throne, where they made another Reverence.

This being done, the Dean and Prebends, with Garter, Principal King of Arms before them, (he having waited their coming thither) aſcended the Steps, and approaching near to the Table before the King, made their laſt Reverence.

The Dean firſt preſented the Crown, which was by the Lord High-Conſtable, and Lord Great-Chamberlain, ſet upon the Table; who afterwards took from each of the Prebends that part of the Regalia, which they carried, and laid them alſo by the Crown: which done, they retired.

Then, the Lord Great-Chamberlain preſenting the Regalia ſeverally to the King, His Majeſty thereupon diſpoſed of them unto the Noble-men hereafter named, to be carryed by them in the Proceeding to the Abbey-Church, viz.

St. Edward's Staff to the Earl of Sandwich.
The Spurs to the Earl of Penbroke and Montgomery.
The Scepter with the Croſs to the Earl of Bedford.
The Pointed Sword (born on the left hand of Curtana) to the Earl of Derby.

The Sword of State to the Earl of Mancheſter.
The Scepter with the Dove to the Duke of Albemarle.
The Orb with the Croſs to the Duke of Buckingham.
St. Edward's Crown to the Duke of Ormond.
The Patena to the Biſhop of Exeter: And laſtly,
The Chalice to the Biſhop of London.

And becauſe the Spoon and Ampulla were not to be born in the Proceeding, and therefore ought not to have been brought thither, but placed upon the High-Altar, in the Abbey-Church, there to lye in readineſs; they were not preſented to the King, but commanded to be ſent back thither, and laid thereon.

All things being thus prepared, and it being about ten a clock, the Proceeding began from out the ſaid Hall into the Palace-Yard, through the Gate-Houſe, and the end of King's-ſtreet, thence along the Great Sanctuary, and ſo to the Weſt-end of the Abbey-Church, all upon Blew Cloth, which was ſpread upon the Ground, from the Throne in Weſtminſter-Hall, to the great Steps in the Abbey-Church, by Sir George Cateret Knight, Vice-Chamberlain, appointed by the King to be his Almoner for this Day.

When the Proceeding had entred the Abbey-Church, all paſſed through the Quire, and thence went up the Stairs toward the great Stage, and, as they arrived at the top thereof, were diſpoſed 1661. diſpoſed by the Heralds into two Galleries, built on either ſide the upper end of the Quire.

That, on the North-ſide, received the Aldermen of London, the Judger, and Gentlemen of the Long-Robe, the Quire of Weſtminſter, the Gentlemen and Children of the King's Chappel, (excepting twelve Gentlemen, four Children, and one Organiſt, who went into a Gallery, raiſed on the South-ſide of the Upper Quire, peculiarly appointed for them:) and, in the Gallery, on the South-ſide, were ſeated the Knights of the Bath, and Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber.

The King, being entred the Weſt-Door of the Abbey-Church, was received with an Anthem, begun by the Quire of Weſtminſter; who, with the Dean, and Prebends, had before fallen off from the Proceeding, a little on the left hand of the middle Iſle, and ſtayed there to attend His coming, where alſo a Fald-ſtool, and Cuſhions were laid ready for His Majeſty to kneel at.

The Anthem ſung was the firſt, fourth, fifth, and ſixth Verſes of the 122d Pſalm:

I was glad when they ſaid unto me, We will go into the Houſe of the Lord, &c.

The King, arriving at the Fald-ſtool, kneeled down, and uſed ſome private Ejaculations; which being finiſhed, He thence proceeded into, and through the Quire, up to the great Theatre (erected cloſe to the four high Pillars, ſtanding between the Quire and the Altar) upon which the Throne of Eſtate was placed, (being a Square raiſed on five Degrees) at the Entrance whereof were ſet a Chair, Foot-ſtool, and Cuſhion, covered with Cloth of Gold, whereon he repoſed himſelf.

Immediately after the Biſhop of London (who was appointed to Officiate, in part, that Day, for the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, whoſe age and weakneſs rendred him uncapable of performing his whole Duty at the Coronation) having the Lord High-Conſtable, the Earl Marſhal, the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Lord High Chancellour, and Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold before him, went firſt to the South, next to the Weſt, and laſtly, to the North-ſide of the Theatre; and at every of the ſaid three ſides, acquainted the People, That he preſented to them King CHARLES, the rightful Inheritour of the Crown of this Realm; and asked them, If they were willing to do their Homage, Service, and Bounden Duty to Him.

As this was doing, the King roſe up, and ſtood by the aforeſaid Chair, turning His Face ſtill to that ſide of the Stage, where the ſaid Biſhop ſtood, when he ſpake to the People; who ſignified their willingneſs, by loud Shouts, and Acclamations.

The ſame Queſtion was likewiſe put by the ſaid Biſhop to all the Nobility preſent.

Immediately after, this following Anthem was ſung by the Gentlemen of the King's Chappel:

Let thy Hand be ſtrengthened, and thy right Hand be exalted. Let Juſtice and Judgment be the Preparation of thy Seat, and Mercy and Truth go before thy Face.

In which time, a large Carpet was ſpread by a Groom and Page of the removing Wardrobe, from the Altar, down below the half-Paces thereof, and over that a Silk Carpet, and Cuſhion, laid by the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black-Rod, and Mr. Kinnerſley: whereupon the Biſhop of London went down from the Stage towards the Altar, and having made his Reverence, placed himſelf at the North-ſide thereof.

Then the King deſcended from His Throne, and proceeded towards the Altar; being ſupported by the Biſhops of Dureſme, and Bath and Wells, with the Four Swords, the grand Officers, the Noblemen, and Biſhops, that carried the Regalia before Him, the Dean of Weſtminſter alſo attending. Being arrived at the Steps of the Altar, He kneeled down upon the Cuſhion, there laid ready for him, having firſt offered the Pall, (which was of Cloth of Gold, and born by the Earl of Sandwich) as alſo a Wedge of Gold of a pound weight (preſented unto His Hands by the Lord Cornwallis, Treaſurer of His Houſhold) both which were received from the King by the Biſhop of London, who laid them reverently upon the Altar. Immediately after, his Majeſty retired to a Chair of State, ſet on the South-ſide of the Altar, a little below the Traverſe of Crimſon Taffety.

After this, the Biſhops, and Noble-men, that carried the Regalia, drew near to the Altar, and preſented every particular to the ſaid Biſhop of London, who placed them alſo upon the Altar; and having ſo done, they retired to their Seats. Whereupon the King kneeled at a Fald-ſtool (ſet on the right ſide of his Chair of State) whil'ſt the Biſhop of London ſaid this Prayer.

O God, which doſt viſit thoſe, that are humble, and doſt comfort us by thy Holy Spirit, ſend down thy Grace upon this thy Servant CHARLES, that by Him we may feel thy Preſence among us, through Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

This Prayer ended, the Biſhop of Worceſter went up into the Pulpit, placed on the North-ſide of the Altar, oppoſite to the King, and began his SERMON, the Text being taken out of the 28th Chapter of the Proverbs, and the ſecond Verſe.

From the beginning of the aforeſaid Offering to this time the KING was bare, but now He put on His Cap, made of Crimſon Velvet, turn'd up with Ermines: with which He ſate covered all the Sermon-time.

On the King's right hand ſtood the Biſhop of Dureſme, and beyond him the Noble-men, that carried the Swords, who held them naked, and erect. The Duke of York ſate a little behind Him on His left hand; next to whom ſtood the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, together with the Lord Great Chamberlain.

The Lord High Chancellour, and Lord High Treaſurer, ſate on a Form behind the Duke of York; and behind them, in a Gallery, ſate the Dutcheſs of York.

In the ſame Gallery alſo were placed

Baron Bateville, Ordinary Ambaſſadour from Spain.

The Marqueſs de Montbrun, with ſeveral other Gentlemen-ſtrangers.

But, Don Franciſco de Mello, the Ambaſſadour of Portugal, was placed in the Lord Chamberlain's Box.

On the North-ſide of the Altar ſate the Biſhop of London, directly oppoſite to the King in the Arch-Biſhops Chair, covered with Purple Velvet: the reſt of the Biſhops were placed on Forms behind him.

And higher, towards St. Edward's Chappel ſtood Garter, Principal King of Arms, with the Officers of the ſtanding and moving Ward-robe, viz. Mr. Rumbal, and Mr. Townſend, and Mr. Kinnerſley, in Scarlet Gowns, having a Crown embroidered with Gold on their left Sleeves; the Groom and Page of the Ward-robe having Scarlet Gowns alſo, but not the Badg of the Crown; the Serjeant of the Veſtry with his gilt Verge, and other Vergers: with them alſo ſtood Mr. Aſhburnham, Mr. Seymour, Mr. Elliot, Mr. Progers, and Mr. Chiffinch, with ſome other of the King's Servants, who attended to do Service.

Oppoſite to them, on the South-ſide of the Altar, ſtood the Dean and Prebends of Weſtminſter.

St. Edward's ancient Chair, (covered all over with Cloth of Gold) was placed upon the North-ſide of the Altar, a little lower then that belonging to the Arch-Biſhop, but ſomething nearer the middle of the Iſle, and between the King's Chair of State and the Pulpit.

Near the Pulpit ſtood the Maſter of the Jewel-Houſe, and the Lord Mayor of London.

The Nobility, not formerly named, (who were ſeated upon Forms round about the in-ſide of the Stage) when Sermon began, drew near to that ſide thereof, which faced the High Altar, and ſtood there.

On the Corners of the Stage, near the High Altar, adjoyning to the two uppermoſt Pillars, were Places railed in for the Provincial Kings, Heralds, and Purſuivants.

The Serjeants at Arms, being ſixteen in number, ſtood with their Maces on their Shoulders, within the Rails, on either ſide the Entrance of the Stage from the Quire.

Over the Door, and at the Weſt-end of the Quire, ſtood the Drums, and Trumpets.

Sermon being ended, the King uncovered his Head, and immediately the Biſhop of London aroſe from his Seat, and drew near to the Kings Chair of State, and asked Him His willingneſs to take the uſual Oath to confirm the Laws to the People, and namely the Franchiſes granted to the Clergy by St. Edward the Confeſſour, to maintain the Goſpel eſtabliſhed in the Kingdom, to keep Peace, execute Juſtice, and grant the Commons the rightful Cuſtoms: unto every of which Queſtions His Majeſty made particular Anſwers, That He would.

Then the Biſhop of Rocheſter read the Biſhop's Petition to the King; the Prayer whereof was, That He would preſerve unto them, and the Churches committed to their Charge, all Canonical Priviledges, due Law, and Juſtice, and protect, and defend Them, and the Churches under their Government: Which his Majeſty moſt graciouſly by a large Anſwer (which repeated the words of the Petition) granted, and promiſed to perform. 1661.

Afterwards the King, aſſiſted by the Biſhops of Dureſme, and Bath and Wells, was led from his Chair up to the Altar (the Sword of State being born before Him, and the Lord Great Chamberlain attending) where He took an Oath to perform, and keep what He had promiſed.

Which Oath taken, the King was led in like manner back to His Chair of State, and immediately the Biſhop of London begun the Hymn, Come Holy Ghoſt, eternal God, &c. the Quires ſinging the reſt of it.

And a little before the ending thereof, the Fald-ſtool was ſet again at the King's right Hand; whereat (as ſoon as the Hymn was finiſhed) He kneeled, the Biſhop of London ſtanding before him, and ſaying the following Prayer.

We beſeech thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty, and everlaſting God, for This thy Servant Charles, &c.

The Prayer ended, the Biſhop of London went to the North-ſide of the Altar, the King ſtill kneeling, and forthwith the Biſhops of Peterborough, and Glouceſter, went, and kneeled on the upper hault-pace of the Altar, where they began the Letany, the Quires ſinging the Reſponſes; the Dean of Weſtminſter kneeling all the while at the King's left Hand.

After the Letany followed three Prayers, ſaid by the Biſhop of London at the North-ſide of the Altar: and, a little before the laſt of them was ended, the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury came out at the North-door of St. Edward's Chappel, veſted in a rich antient Cope.

At the ending of the third Prayer, the ſaid Arch-Biſhop ſtanding before the Altar, began the Verſicle, Lift up your Hearts.

Reſp.
We lift them up to the Lord.
Arch-Biſhop.
Let us give thanks unto the Lord our God.
Reſp.
It is meet and right ſo to do.
Arch-Biſhop.
It is very meet, and right, and our bounden duty, that we ſhould at all times, and in all places, give thanks unto thee, O Lord, Holy Father, &c.

This Preface being finiſh'd, the King aroſe from before the Fald-ſtool, and went to the Altar, ſupported by the aforeſaid Biſhops of Dureſm, and Bath and Wells: where He was diſrobed by the Lord Great Chamberlain of His Royal Robes, which were immediately carried thence into the Traverſe erected in St. Edward's Chappel.

Whil'ſt this was in doing, the Chair, that was before placed at the entrance of the Stage, was

1661. was removed, and ſet on the North-ſide of the Altar, betwixt it, and St. Edward's Chair, whereunto the King came, ſate down, and was anointed by the ſaid Arch-Biſhop, (while the Dean of Weſtminſter held the Ampulla, and poured the Oyl out into the Spoon) firſt in the Palms of both his hands, in manner of a Croſs, the Arch-Biſhop as he anointed Him, pronouncing theſe words,

Let theſe Hands be anointed with Holy Oyl, as Kings and Prophets have been anointed, and as Samuel did anoint David to be King; that Thou mayſt be bleſſed, and eſtabliſhed KING, in this Kingdom, and this People, whom the Lord Thy God hath given Thee to rule over: which he vouchſafe to grant, who, with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, Three in Perſon, and One in Unity, be bleſſed, and praiſed, now, and for evermore. Amen.

After which the Quire ſung this Anthem,

Sadoc the Prieſt, and Nathan the Prophet anointed Solomon King, and all the People rejoyced, and ſaid, God ſave the KING.

At the end of which Anthem, the Arch-Biſhop ſaid this Prayer,

Look down, Almighty God, with thy favourable countenance upon this Glorious KING, &c.

And then proceeded with his anointing the King's Breaſt, between His Shoulders, on both His Shoulders, the two bowings of His Arms, and on the Crown of His Head, in manner aforeſaid.

Which being done, the Anointing was dried up with fine Linen, and the Loops of His Shirt cloſed up by the Dean of Weſtminſter, and then the Arch-Biſhop ſaid theſe two Prayers,

God, the Son of God, Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, who is anointed of his Father with the oyl of Gladneſs above his fellows, &c. God, which art the Glory of the Righteous, and the Mercy of Sinners, &c.

During the time of Unction, a rich Pall of Cloth of Gold (brought from the great Wardrobe by Mr. Rumball) was held over the King's Head by the Dukes of Buckingham and Albemarle, the Earls of Berks and Sandwich, as Knights of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter.

After theſe Prayers, the Lord Great Chamberlain delivered the Coif to the Arch-Biſhop, who put it on the King's Head, and immediately after, the Dean of Weſtminſter put the Coif, with the Colobium Sindonis, or Surplice upon the King: whereupon the Arch-Biſhop ſaid this ſhort Prayer.

O God, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, by whom Kings do reign, and Lawgivers do make good Laws, vouchſafe, we beſeech thee, in thy favour, to bleſs this Kingly Ornament, and Grant, that thy Servant Charles, our King, who ſhall wear it, may ſhine in thy ſight with the Ornament of a good Life, and holy Actions; and, after this life ended, He may for ever enjoy that Life, and Glory, which hath no end, through Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

This ſaid, the Dean of Weſtminſter having likewiſe fetched the Tiſſue-Hoſe and Sandals from the Altar, he arrayed the King therewith; as alſo with the Super-tunica, or cloſe Pall of Cloth of Gold, and girded the ſame about Him.

But the Taffety red Shirt was not made uſe of at all.

After all this, the ſaid Dean took the Spurs from off the Altar, and delivered them to the Lord Great Chamberlain, who touched the King's Heels therewith, and forthwith ſent them back to the Altar.

Then the Arch-Biſhop received the Sword of State in the Scabbard from the Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold, and laid it upon the Altar, ſaying this Prayer, Hear our Prayers, we beſeech thee, O Lord, and vouchſafe by thy right hand of Majeſty, to bleſs, and ſanctifie this Sword, wherewith thy Servant Charles deſireth to be girt, that it may be a Defence and Protection of Churches, Widows and Orphans, and all the Servants of God, againſt the ſavage cruelty of Pagans, and Infidels; and that it may be a Fear and Terrour to all thoſe that lie in wait to do miſchief, through Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

This Prayer finiſhed, the Arch-Biſhop and Biſhops aſſiſting, delivered the Sword back to the King, ſaying, Accipe gladium per manus Epiſcoporum.

Whereupon the Lord Great Chamberlain girt it about the King, and the Arch-Biſhop ſaid, Receive this Kingly Sword, which is hallowed for the defence of the Holy Church, and delivered unto Thee by the hands of the Biſhops, though unworthy, yet conſecrated by the authority of the holy Apoſtles, &c.

After this, the Dean of Weſtminſter took the Armil*, made of Cloth of Tiſſue, (brought thither by Mr. Rumbal, on the behalf of the Earl of Sandwich, Maſter of the great Ward-robe) and put it about the King's Neck, and tyed it to the bowings of His Arms, the Arch-Biſhop ſtanding before the King, with the Biſhop of London, on his right Hand, and ſaying, Receive the Armil of ſincerity, and wiſdom, as a Token of God's embracing, whereby all thy works may be defended againſt thine Enemies, both bodily and ghoſtly, through Chriſt our Lord.

*Armillæ ſunt in modum Stolæ, & ab utraque ſcapula uſque ad Compages Brachiorum erunt dependentes, in ipſis Compagibus laqueis ſericis connexa.

Next the Mantle or open Pall, being made of Cloth of Gold, and lined with red Taffety, was put upon him by the ſaid Dean; the Arch-Biſhop likewiſe uſing the words of Signification, viz.

Receive this Pall, which is formed with four Corners, to let Thee underſtand, that the four Corners of the World are ſubject to the Power of God; and that no Man can happily reign upon the Earth, who hath not received his authority from Heaven.

In the next place, the Arch-Biſhop took Saint Edwards Crown, and bleſſed it, ſaying,

God, the Crown of the Faithful, &c. bleſs, and ſanctifie this Crown, that as the ſame is adorned with divers precious Stones, ſo This thy Servant, that weareth it, may be filled with thy manifold Graces of all precious Vertues, through the King eternal, thy Son our Lord. Amen.

In

In the mean time, St. Edward's Chair was removed into the middle of the Iſle, and ſet right over againſt the Altar, whither the King went, and ſate down in it, and then the Arch-Biſhop brought St. Edward's Crown from the Altar, and put it upon his Head.

Whereupon, all the People, with loud and repeated ſhouts, cryed God ſave the KING; and, by a Signal then given, the great Ordinance from the Tower were alſo ſhot off.

At the ceaſing of theſe Acclamations, the Arch-Biſhop went on, ſaying,

God crown thee with a Crown of Glory, and Righteouſneſs, with the honour and work of Fortitude, that thou by thy Miniſtrie, having a Right Faith and manifold fruit of good Works, mayſt obtain the Crown of an everlaſting Kingdom, by the gift of him, whoſe Kingdom endureth for ever. Amen.

Adding thereunto this Prayer,

O God of Eternity, &c. Bleſs this thy Servant, who * boweth his Head unto thy Majeſty, &c.

* At which words the King bowed His Head.

After the Prayer, the Arch-Biſhop read the Confortare,

Be ſtrong, and of a good courage, and obſerve the Commandments of the Lord, to walk in his ways, &c.

In the mean while, the Quires ſung this Anthem.

The King ſhall rejoyce in thy ſtrength, O Lord. Exceeding glad ſhall he be of thy Salvation, &c.

Upon this, the Dukes, Marqueſſes, Earls, and Viſcounts put on their Coronets; the Barons their Caps: and divers of them came and ſtood about the KING, who ſtill ſate in S. Edward's Chair.

Mr. Garter and the Provincial Kings put on their Crowns alſo.

Then the Maſter of the Jewel-Houſe delivered to the Arch-Biſhop the Ring, who conſecrated it, after this manner, ſaying, Bleſs, O Lord, and ſanctifie this Ring, that thy Servant, wearing it, may be ſealed with the Ring of Faith, and by the Power of the Higheſt be preſerved from ſin, and let all the Bleſſings, which are found in Holy Scripture, plentifully deſcend upon him, that whatſoever he ſhall ſanctifie, may be holy; and whatſoever he bleſſeth, may be bleſſed. Amen.

After which, he put it upon the fourth Finger of the King's right Hand, and ſaid, Receive this Ring of Kingly Dignity, and by it the Seal of Catholick Faith, that as this Day thou art adorned the Head and Prince of this Kingdom, and People, ſo thou mayſt preſerve as the Author, and Eſtabliſher of Chriſtianity, and the Chriſtian Faith; that, being rich in Faith, and happy in Works, Thou mayſt reign with him, that is King of Kings; to whom be Honour, and Glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

And then began this Prayer, 1661.

O God, to whom belongeth all Power, and Dignity, give unto thy Servant Charles the Fruit of his Dignity, wherein grant he may long continue, and fear thee always, and always labour to pleaſe thee, through Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

When this Prayer was finiſhed, the linen Gloves were delivered to the KING by the Lord Great Chamberlain: who, going to the Altar, ungirt his Sword, and offered it at the Altar in the Scabbard; which being redeemed by the Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold, was drawn out of the Scabbard, and carried naked by him all the following part of the Solemnity.

Then the Arch-Biſhop took the Scepter, with the Croſs, from off the Altar, and delivered it into the King's right Hand, ſaying, Receive this Scepter, the Sign of Kingly Power, the Rod of Kingdoms, the Rod of Vertue, that thou govern thy Self aright, and defend the Holy Church, and Chriſtian People committed by God unto thy Charge, puniſh the Wicked, and protect the Juſt, and lead them in the ways of Righteouſneſs, and that from this Temporal Kingdom thou mayſt be advanced to an Eternal Kingdom, by his Goodneſs whoſe Kingdom is everlaſting. Amen.

Whil'ſt this was pronounced by the Arch-Biſhop, Mr. Henry Howard delivered to the King a rich Glove, which he put on his right hand, and then received the Scepter. And after that, the Arch-Biſhop ſaid this Prayer,

O Lord, the Fountain of all good things, &c. Grant, we beſeech thee, to this thy Servant Charles, that he may order aright the Dignity, which he hath obtained, &c.

During which time, the ſaid Mr. Howard performed the ſervice of ſupporting the King's right Arm, according it was adjudged to him by the Court of Claims, by vertue of holding the Manor of Worksop in the County of Nottingham.

Next of all, the Arch-Biſhop took the Scepter with the Dove, and gave it into the King's Hand alſo, ſaying, Receive the Rod of Vertue, and Equity, learn to make much of the Godly, and to terrifie the Wicked, ſhew the way to thoſe that go aſtray, offer thy hand to thoſe that fall, repreſs the proud, lift up the lowly, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt may open to thee the Door, who ſaith of himſelf, "I am the Door, by me if any man "enter, he ſhall be ſafe. And let him be thy help, who is the Key of David, and the Scepter of the Houſe of Iſrael, "who openeth, and no "man ſhutteth, who ſhutteth, and no man "openeth; who bringeth the Captive out of "Priſon where he ſate in darkneſs, and in the "ſhadow of death. That in all things thou mayſt follow him, of whom the Prophet David ſaith, "The Scepter of thy Kingdom is a right Scep-"ter, thou haſt loved Righteouſneſs, and hated "Iniquity; wherefore God, even thy God "hath anointed thee with the Oyl of gladneſs "above thy fellows, even Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

1661. After which the KING kneeled, holding both the Scepters in his Hands, whil'ſt the Arch-Biſhop thus bleſſed Him,

The Lord bleſs thee, and keep thee; and as he hath made thee King over his People, ſo he ſtill proſper thee in this World, and make thee partaker of this eternal Felicity in the World to come. Amen.

Then the KING aroſe, and ſet himſelf again in St. Edward's Chair, whil'ſt the Arch-Biſhop and Biſhops preſent, one after another, kneeled before him, and were kiſſed by him.

In the mean time, the King's Chair of State, wherein He was anointed, was ſet above the upper Steps at the entrance upon the Theatre, whither the KING went, as ſoon as He had performed the Ceremony of kiſſing the Biſhops, having now four Swords born naked before him, the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, and Great Officers attending: at his arrival there, the Arch-Biſhop ſaid this Prayer, the King kneeling,

Grant, O Lord, that the Clergy, and People, gathered together by thine Ordinance for this ſervice of the KING, may by the moſt gracious aſſiſtance of thy goodneſs, and the vigilant care of thy Servant Our KING, be continually governed, and preſerved in all happineſs.

Then the King aroſe, and repoſed himſelf in the ſaid Chair, whil'ſt both the Quires ſung Te Deum.

When Te Deum was ended, the King aſcended his Throne placed in the middle of the Theatre, the Swords, and Great Officers ſtanding on either ſide; as alſo the Biſhops, ſome in Copes, others in Rochets, the Arch-Biſhop then ſaying, Stand, and hold faſt from henceforth that Place, whereof hitherto You have been Heir by the Succeſſion of Your Fore-fathers, &c.

After this, the Biſhops, and Nobility did their Homage to the King in manner following.

And firſt the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury kneeled down before the King's Knees, and ſaid,

I, William Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, ſhall be Faithful, and True, and Faith, and Truth bear unto You, Our Sovereign Lord and Your Heirs, Kings of England, and ſhall do, and truly acknowledg the Service of the Land, which I claim to hold of You, in the right of the Church: So Help me God.

The like did all the other Biſhops, that were preſent.

Then came up the Duke of York, with Garter, principal King of Arms, before him, and his Train born by two Gentlemen, who, being arrived at the Throne, kneeled down before the King, put off his Coronet, and did his Homage: at which the Drums beat, Trumpets ſounded, and all the People ſhouted.

The like did the Dukes of Buckingham, and Albemarle, for themſelves, and the reſt of the Dukes.

So alſo did the Marqueſſes of Worceſter, and Dorcheſter.

Next, the Earl of Oxford did homage after the ſame manner for himſelf, and all the reſt of the Earls, who attended upon him to ſignifie their conſents.

After him, Viſcount Hereford did the like for himſelf, and the reſt of the Viſcounts; and then the Drums beat, and Trumpets ſounded again, and the People ſhouted.

Laſtly, Baron Audley in like manner did homage for himſelf, and all the Baronage, who alſo accompanied him to the Throne, in teſtification of their Conſents; which being finiſhed, Drums, Trumpets, and Shouts followed.

Note, That the Words of Homage were ſaid by every one of the Nobility, that kneeled down, viz.

I, N. N. do become Your Liege-man of Life, and Limb, and of Earthly Worſhip; and Faith, and Truth I ſhall bear unto You, to live, and die, againſt all manner of Folks: So God me help.

Afterwards the Duke of York, and all the Nobility ſingly aſcended the Throne, and touched the King's Crown, promiſing by that Ceremony to be ever ready to ſupport it with all their power.

During the performing of this Solemn Ceremony, the Lord High Chancellour went to the South, Weſt, and North-ſides of the Stage, and proclaimed to the People the King's General Pardon, being attended by Mr. Garter to the South-ſide, and by a Gentlemen-Uſher, and two Heralds to the other two Sides.

And at theſe three Sides, at the ſame time, did the Lord Cornwallis, Treaſurer of his Majeſtie's Houſhold, fling abroad the Medals, both of Gold, and Silver, prepared for the Coronation, as a Princely Donation, or Largeſs, among the People.

Behold, O Lord, our Defender, and look upon the Face of thine Anointed.

The Violins, and other Inſtrumental Muſick, (who were robed in Scarlet Mantles, and placed in a Gallery erected over againſt them, on the North-ſide of the Altar) anſwering alternately: at the ending of which Anthem, the Trumpets ſounded, and Drums beat again. In which time the King took off his Crown, and delivered it to the Lord High Chamberlain to hold; the Scepter with the Croſs to Mr. Henry Howard, and that with the Dove to the Duke of Albemarle.

The Epiſtle (taken out of the Firſt Epiſtle of St. Peter, the ſecond Chapter, and beginning at the eleventh Verſe) was read by the Biſhop of Chicheſter.

The Goſpel (being part of the twenty ſecond Chapter of St. Matthew, beginning at the 15th Verſe) by the Biſhop of Ely.

After

After which, the Nicene Creed was began by the Biſhop of London, and ſung by the Gentlemen of the Chappel, with Verſe, and Chorus, (that, and the reſt of the ſpecial Muſick, for the Solemnity, being ſet by Captain Cook, Maſter of the Children of his Majeſtie's ſaid Chappel) The Violins, and other Inſtrumental Muſick placed in the Gallery over againſt them, alternately playing.

All which time the King ſtood by His Throne.

But towards the end of the Creed He took again his Crown from the Lord Great Chamberlain, and put it on his Head; as alſo the Scepter with the Croſs from Mr. Howard, and that with the Dove from the Duke of Albemarle, and prepared for His Deſcent from his Throne towards the Altar, to receive the Communion.

And, as ſoon as the ſinging of the Creed was fully ended, the King deſcended with the Crown on his Head, and Scepters in both Hands, (the Biſhops of Dureſm, and Bath and Wells, ſupporting him) with the four Swords naked before, and all the great Officers attending.

In the time of this Proceeding, the Quire ſung.

Let my Prayer come up into thy preſence as the Incenſe, and the lifting up of my hand be as an Evening-Sacrifice.

Here the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury retired from the Ceremonies into St. Edward's Chappel, and thence went home, leaving the remainder of his Duty to be performed by the Biſhop of London.

At the King's approach to the Altar, the Biſhop of Ely delivered unto Him Bread, and Wine, which He there offered, and then returned to the Fald-ſtool, on the South-ſide of the Altar, near His Chair of State, before which He kneeled down, and laid His Crown upon the Cuſhion before Him, towards his right Hand; and the Scepter with the Dove, on his left; and gave again to Mr. Howard the Scepter with the Croſs, who held it, kneeling on the Kings right Hand: the Grand Officers, and the Noble-men, with the four Swords naked, and erect, ſtanding about Him.

Then the Biſhop of London ſaid this Prayer.

Bleſs, O Lord, we beſeech thee, theſe thy Gifts, and ſanctifie them unto This holy Uſe, &c.

At the end of which, the Lord Cornwallis, Treaſurer of the Houſhold, preſented the King with another Wedg of Gold; which goeth under the name of the Mark of Gold. This the King offered into the Baſon, kneeling ſtill at his Fald-ſtool, whil'ſt the Biſhop of London ſaid the following Prayer, Almighty God give Thee the dew of Heaven, and the fatneſs of the Earth, and abundance of Corn and Wine, &c.

And next pronounced this Bleſſing,

Bleſs, O Lord, the virtuous carriage of This King, and accept the Work of His Hands: repleniſh the Realm with the Bleſſings of Heaven, of the Dew, of the Water, and of the Deeps.

Then the Biſhop proceeded to the Conſecration of the Sacrament: which being finiſhed, he firſt of all received; next, the Dean of Weſtminſter; then the Biſhop of Bath and Wells; and laſtly, the Biſhop of Dureſm. 1661.

Theſe four Prelates having communicated, Preparation was made for the King's Receiving, who kneeled all this while before His Fald-ſtool.

The Towel was brought thither by Mr. Rumbal on the behalf of the Maſter of the Ward-robe, and preſented to the Biſhops of Hereford, and Carliſle, who held it before the King, while He received.

The Biſhop of London gave the King the Bread, and the Dean of Weſtminſter the Cup.

As ſoon as the King had received, this Anthem was begun by the upper Quire, O hearken unto the voice of my calling, my King, and my God, &c.

In the mean while, the King returned to His Throne upon the Theatre, with the Crown on his Head, and bearing the Scepters in his Hands.

When he came thither, he put off his Crown, and delivered it to the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Scepter with the Croſs to Mr. Howard, and that other with the Dove to the Duke of Albemarle.

And then the Biſhop of London went on with the Communion, which being finiſhed, the King (attended as before) deſcended from his Throne crowned, with both the Scepters in his Hand.

The reſt of the Regalia (which lay all this while on the Altar, being delivered to the Noble-men, that brought them in the Proceeding to the Church) were carried before him, and thence the King proceeded into St. Edward's Chappel, the Organs playing all the while.

Where being arrived, he took off St. Edward's Crown, and delivered it to the Biſhop of London, who immediately laid it upon St. Edward's Altar; all the reſt of the Regalia were given into the hands of the Dean of Weſtminſter, and laid there alſo.

Afterwards the King entred into the Traverſe erected in the middle of the Wall, on the back-ſide of the High-Altar, and there retired, whil'ſt he was diſrobed of St. Edward's Robes by Mr. Seymor, and Mr. Aſhburnham, Grooms of the Bed-Chamber, on the behalf of the Lord High-Chamberlain, Mr. Eliot, Mr. Progers, Colonel Philips, and Mr. Chiffinch aſſiſting.

Theſe Robes were laid on St. Edward's Altar, by the Biſhop of Dureſm; and afterwards delivered to the Dean of Weſtminſter to lay up with the Regalia.

After this, the King was arrayed in his Purple Robes, and then came near to St. Edward's Altar, where the Biſhop of London ſtood ready with the Imperial Crown in his hands, and ſet that upon the King's Head; thereupon the King took the Scepter with the Croſs in his right Hand, with the Globe in his left; and immediately the Proceeding (ordered alſo by the Heralds) began thence into Weſtminſter-Hall, the ſame way that he came, and attended after the ſame manner, ſaving that the Noble-men, and Biſhops, which brought the Regalia to the Abbey-Church, went not now immediately before the King, as 1661. they did then, but were ranked in places according to their Degrees, and Conſecrations: all the Noble-men, with their Coronets, and Caps on their Heads. The Kings of Arms marched likewiſe with their Crowns on.

The Proceeding being entred into Weſtminſter-Hall, the Nobility, and others, who had Tables aſſigned them, went, and placed themſelves thereat; but the King, (attended with the Great Officers) withdrew into the Inner-Court of Wards, for half an hour.

In the mean time, all the Tables in the Hall were ſerved, viz. before the King's Service came up; and were placed in this manner:

On the right hand of the King's Throne, below in the Hall, were ſet two Tables, one beneath the other: at the upper end of the firſt next the State, (which had two Side-Tables to ſerve it) ſate the Biſhops, and below them the Judges, with the reſt of the Long-Robe.

At the ſecond Table, (which had two Side-Board Tables likewiſe to ſerve it) ſate the Maſters of the Chancery, and the Six Clerks.

And here, at this Table, were the Barons of the Cinque-Ports neceſſitated to ſit, although the upper end of the firſt Table was appointed for them.

The Occaſion this: No ſooner had the aforeſaid Barons brought up the King to the foot of the Stairs in Weſtminſter-Hall, aſcending to His Throne, and turned on the left hand (towards their own Table) out of the way, but the King's Foot-men moſt inſolently, and violently ſeized upon the Canopy, which the Barons endeavouring to keep, and defend, were by their number, and ſtrength drag'd down to the lower end of the Hall, nevertheleſs ſtill keeping their hold: and, had not Mr. Owen YORK-Herald been accidentally near the Hall-Door, and ſeeing the Conteſt, cauſed the ſame to be ſhut, the Foot-men had certainly carried it away by force. But in the interim alſo, (ſpeedy notice hereof having been given the King) one of Querries were ſent from Him, with Command, to impriſon the Foot-men, and diſmiſs them out of His Service, which put an end to the preſent Diſturbance.

Theſe Foot-men were alſo commanded to make their ſubmiſſion to the Court of Claims, (which was accordingly done by them, the 30th of April following, and the Canopy then delivered back to the ſaid Barons.

Whil'ſt this Diſturbance happened, the upper end of the aforeſaid Table was taken up by the Biſhops, Judges, &c. and hereupon it came to paſs, that the Barons of the Cinque-Ports loſt their Places, and were neceſſitated to ſit down at the ſaid ſecond Table, with the Maſters of Chancery, &c. where there was Room left by ſome of the Long-Robe, that ſate at the Upper-Table.

Upon the left hand of the King's Throne, below, on the other ſide of the Hall, was placed likewiſe a long Table, which reached down near to the Common-Pleas-Court, whereat the Nobility dined; and this Table had four Side-Board-Tables to ſerve it.

And behind this, cloſe to the Wall, at a ſhorter Table, ſate the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Recorder, and twelve chief Citizens of London, who had alſo two Side-Tables to ſerve them.

Laſtly, within the Court of Common-Pleas was a Table with one Side-Table to ſerve it, ſet for the Officers of Arms, whereat they alſo dined. Each Table was furniſhed with three Courſes anſwerable to that of the King's, beſides the Banquet.

A little before the King returned to Dinner, two Eſquires of the Body, viz. Ferdinando Marſham, and Henry Norwood, took their Seats upon two little Foot-ſtools, on either ſide of the foot of the King's Chair, (placed in the middle of the Table) and there ſate until the King came in to Dinner; when riſing, and performing their Duty in placing the King's Robes for His better conveniency of ſitting, they ſate down again at the King's Feet a good part of Dinner time, and untill the King gave them leave to riſe; He accepting that time of Seſſion in full performance of their Service.

On the right Side of the Throne was erected a Gallery, for the Kings of Arms, Heralds, and Purſuivants; and oppoſite to that, on the other ſide, another for the Muſick: and below, on the old Scaffolds, next the Court of Common-Pleas, ſtood the King's Trumpeters.

Dinner being set on the Table, the King came forth from the Inner-Court of Wards, in his Royal Robes, with the Crown on His Head, and Scepter in his Hand, having the three Swords born naked before Him, and went directly to his Chair at the Table, wherein He sate down to Dinner, the Bishop of London saying Grace. The Bason and Ewer were brought up and presented by the Earl of Penbroke and Montgomery, assisted by the Lord Paget, and the Serjeant of the Ewery.

On the King's right Hand, the Noble-men, that carried the three Swords, stood, holding them naked, and erected, all the Dinner-while; at His left Hand stood the Lord High Chamberlain, to whom the King had given the Scepter to hold. And at the Table's end, on the King's left Hand, sate the Duke of York in his Robes and Coronet.

Soon after Dinner was begun, the Lord Allington carried to the King His first Draught of Drink in a Silver Gilt Cup, being assisted by the Earl of Penbroke and Montgomery, Viscount Montague, and the Lord Paget, his Assistants.

The Office of Cup-Bearer, as also the Fee, having been by the Court of Claims adjudged to him, as being seized of the Manner of Wymmundeley in the County of Hertford; and when the King had drank, the said Lord Allington received the Cup for his Fee.

Next, Thomas Leigh Esquire was brought up to the Table with a Mess of Pottage, called Dillegrout, this Service being adjudged unto him by the aforesaid Court of Claims in right of the Manner of Addington, in the County of Surrey; whereupon the Lord High Chamberlain presented him to the King, who accepted the Service, but did not eat thereof.

Afterwards, a little before the second Course was ready, Sir Edward Dymock (to whom the Court of Claims had adjudged the Office of the King's Champion, as being seized of the Manner Scrivelsby, in the County of Lincoln) entred the Hall on a goodly White Courser, and armed at all Points in Rich Armour, having a Plume of Blew Feathers in his Helm, he there made a stand for some time, and then advanced in manner following, way being made for him by the Knight-Marshal.

First, Two Trumpets.
The Serjeant-Trumpeter.
The Serjeant at Arms.
An Esquire carrying a Target, having the Champion's own Arms depicted thereon.
An Esquire, carrying the Champion's Lance upright.
Mr. Owen YORK-Herald.
The Champion.
The Lord High-Constable on his right Hand.
Both likewise on Horse-back.

At

1661. At the lower end of the Hall, YORK-Herald proclaimed the Challenge, in these words following,

The Form of the Challenge however omitted in Mr. Aſhmole's Original, being in all the reſt more Compleat and Correct, we have ſupply'd out of the other Narrative which was ſince done and extracted out of his.

IF any Perſon of what degree ſoever, high or low, ſhall deny, or gain-ſay Our Sovereign Lord King CHARLES the Second, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Son and next Heir to Our Sovereign Lord CHARLES the Firſt, the laſt King deceaſed, to be right Heir to the Imperial Crown of this Realm of England; or that He ought not to enjoy the ſame: here is His Champion, who ſaith, That he lyeth, and is a falſe Traytor, being ready in Perſon to Combate with him, and in this Quarrel will adventure his Life againſt him, on what day ſoever he ſhall be appointed.

Thereupon the Champion threw down his Gantlet, which lying ſome ſmall time, and no body taking it up, it was delivered unto him again by York-Herald. Then all advanced forward untill the Champion came to the middle of the Hall, where York-Herald made the like Proclamation, and the Gantlet was again thrown down, taken up, and returned to the Champion; who advanced to the foot of the aſcending Steps to the State, and at the top of the ſaid Steps, the ſaid Herald proclaimed the ſaid Challenge the third time, wereupon the Champion threw down his Gantlet again, which no body taking up, it was delivered unto him.

This being done, the Earl of Penbroke and Montgomery, (aſſiſted, as before) preſented on the Knee to the King a Gilt Cup with a Cover, full of Wine, who drank to his Champion, and by the ſaid Earl ſent him the Cup; and he, after three Reverences, drank it all off, went a little backward, and ſo departed out of the Hall; taking the ſaid Cup for his Fee, according as had been adjudged him by the ſaid Court of Claims.

When this Solemnity was finiſhed, the Kings Heralds, and Purſuivants deſcended from their Gallery, and went into the Hall to the lower end of the Noble-mens Table, and there all together made their Reverence. Thence they proceeded a little further, and there made a ſecond Reverence; and the like Reverence at the Steps aſcending to the State. Where all ſtanding ſtill, Garter, Principal King of Arms, cryed Largeſs thrice, and proclaimed the King's Style in Latin, French, and Engliſh, making Reverence betwixt every Style. At the finiſhing of which, they all retired backward into the midſt of the Hall, and there, after crying Largeſs again thrice, he proclaimed the King's Style as before. Laſtly, they went yet backwards to the end of the ſaid Noble-mens Table, and did the ſame again; and from thence into the Common-Pleas-Court, to Dinner.

Immediately after this, the ſecond Courſe was brought up by the Gentlemen-Penſioners, with the former Solemnity.

And the laſt Diſh being carryed by Eraſmus Smith Eſquire, he, having delivered the ſame to the Table, preſented the King with three Maple Cups, on the behalf of Robert Bernham Eſquire, who was ſeized of the Manner of Nether-Bilſington in the County of Kent.

Laſtly, the Lord Mayor of London preſented the King with Wine in a Golden Cup having a Cover: of which the King having drank, the ſaid Lord Mayor receive it for his Fee.

By this time the day being far ſpent, the King (having Water brought him by the Earl of Penbroke, and his aſſiſtants) waſhed, and roſe from Dinner before the third Courſe was brought in; and, retiring into the Inner-Court of Wards, he there diſrobed himſelf: and from thence he went privately to his Barge, which waited for him at the Parliament-Stairs, and ſo to the Privy-Stairs at White-Hall, were he landed.

It is a thing very memorable, that, towards the end of Dinner-time, (although all the former part of the day, and alſo the preceeding day, in which the King made his Cavalcade through London, were the only fair days, that we enjoyed of many both before, and after) it began to Thunder and Lighten very ſmartly: which, however ſome ſort of People weer apt to interpret as ominous, and ill-boding, yet it will be no difficult matter to evidence from Antiquity, that Accidents of this nature, though happily they might aſtoniſh, and amaze the common Drove of men, were by the moſt Prudent, and Sagacious, look'd upon as a proſperous, and happy preſage. And of this, Virgil gives us a very pertinent Example (in the Eight Book of his Æneids) where Evander, having addreſſed himſelf in a Speech to Æneas for aid againſt the Hetrurians; and he being ſollicitous how to anſwer his requeſt, mark what Sign was immediately ſent from Heaven,

Namque improviſo vibratus ab Æthere fulgor
Cum ſonitu venit, &c.

For ſuddenly from Heav'n a brandiſh'd Flaſh
With Thunder came, &c.

And preſently after the Poet adds,

Obſtupuere animis alti, ſed Troius Heros
Agnovit ſonitum, & Divæ promiſſa Parentis.

While other ſtood amaz'd, the Hero knew
His Mother's Promiſe by the Sound that flew.

The ſame Author, in another place *, mentions the ſame thing, as a Teſtimony of Prayers heard, and anſwered; as when Old Anchiſes, ſeeing the lambent flame upon his Grand-child Julus his head, lifted up his hands to Heaven, and prayed to Jove for help, and direction, he was thus anſwered,

* Lib. 2.

Vix ea fatus erat Senior, ſubitoque fragore
Intonuit lævum, &c.

Scarce had the grave Sire ſpoke, when ſuddenly
It thundered proſperous, &c.

For ſo Intonuit lævum is interpreted by Servius, according to the Maxim of the Antient Augurs, who interpret Thunder from the North, that is, (as they, contrary to the common Aſtronomers, accounted it) the left part of Heaven, for a proſperous Omen.

But, in reference to our preſent Purpoſe, we may proceed to a larger Interpretation, and conclude, clude, That the Heavens, with the Vollies of Thunder, and nimble Flashes of Lightning, seemed to give a Plaudito, and Acclamation, to this Grand and Sacred Solemnity; in like manner as we Mortals use to close our greater Triumphs with Fire-Works, Bonfires, and the loud Report of our great Ordnance: this Terrestrial Thunder being but the Imitator, and Counterfeit of the Heavenly Artillery.

And so I observe it expounded by Claudian in these Verses,*

* Claud. de Cons. Probini & Olybrii vers. 205.

Ut sceptrum gessere manu, membrisque rigentes
Aptavere togas, Signum dat summus hiulca
Nube Pater, gratamque facem per inane rotantes
Prospera vibrati sonuerunt Omnia Nimbi.

As soon as rob'd, and scepter'd, Jove aloud
His Signal Favour thunders from a Cloud,
Successful Lightning through Heav'n's Arches shines;
Both at His Coronation happy Signs.

Thus having travail'd through a HISTORY fraught with Troubles and Confusions, an Unnatural and Intestine Warr, succeeded by a long time of Usurpation and Mis-rule; and now having at length arriv'd to such a point of Settlement and Right restor'd, as promises a long continued Calm and Peaceful Government, We glad to have found such a Convenient Haven, shall here choose to cast our Anchor; And though several Things have hapned from the Coronation to this present time (as the King's Marriage with the Daughter of Portugal, the Transactions of the present Parliament, with other matters sufficiently Memorable; yet in regard we cannot Close at a more happy Period, We shall reserve as well something of what is past, as what is yet to come, for a farther Continuation, as likewise the observation of that Method which our Historian ever observes at the end of every King's Reign, that time only admitting of the said Method. And if the last Part of our HISTORY, somewhat exceed in Bulk what may be thought proportionable to the rest, It will no doubt be in a great measure excus'd by the Consideration of what manner of Times we have had to set forth, an Interval of such Wonders, such strange and Capricious Revolutions as are scarce to be parallell'd by any Age or Kingdom, hoping that the Intricate Turns and Labyrinths of Fortune being now at length run out, the Course and Stream of the History will run more smooth and clear through all the subsequent Years (which God grant may be many and Prosperous) of His present Majestie's Reign; Than whom, never was any Prince likely to prove a more glorious President to those that after him shall Sit at the Helm of State, both in respect of His Innumerable other Vertues and Regal Endowments, and particularly of His Admirable Skill and Understanding in that which is the Bulwark of the Nation; the Improvement whereof so mainly Imports His own Glory and Renown above all other Princes of the World, and the Reputation and Enrichment of His Subjects; a thing wherein He hath ever shew'd Himself to be most Zealously Concern'd. 1661.
